The only way, then, for one to succeed is to go forward as we have said, but there is something along our lives that we must not forget. While we have duties to ourselves to live rightly and to do rightly we also have duties toward our fellow-men. We have responsibilities to bear. Perhaps we have been given some great revelation of truth. Perhaps some beautiful knowledge has come into our minds, and we feel illuminated and strengthened and uplifted by its power. What, then, is our duty in this respect? If this grand knowledge has come to us and we find it has bettered our lives, made us more useful in the world, more happy, more full of power and hope and courage and determination, and we know if the same sort of knowledge is imparted to our fellow men they will be honored and strengthened and filled with courage and cheer we are recreant to duty if we refrain from telling our fellow beings what we have found and showing them how they may go onward to gain the same.

If this grand revelation of truth—whatever it may be—has come into our lives to illuminate them so that we know more and feel more and are more than we were ever before, and we know or believe that if the same revelation could be brought to our fellow men they would know more and be more and of greater usefulness in the world, then we are cowards and recreants to duty, and we fail in our responsibility if we do not try to give these illuminations to our fellow men.

You will say, "Am I my brother's keeper?" and in this sense we reply, yes. You are not to bind your brother in a dungeon cell, or place him in some condition from which he cannot rise or move but must be constantly under your watchful eye or under the restraints which you place upon him; you have no right to be his keeper in any such sense, but to be his keeper in the sense of learning how he is situated, whether you can help him, whether you can uplift him, give him guidance and assist him to the attainment of knowledge. Thus are you or should you be your brother's keeper, thus helping to make him more noble and ennobling yourself at the same time.

SPIRITUALISM A GREAT REVELATION.

Spiritualism has been a great revelation to human life. We discoursed upon that subject last Sunday. We told you much of Spiritualism as it has come to the world and the conditions that are meant for the betterment of mankind. We will not go over this ground again to-night, but we wish to say here in passing that Spiritualism has come to many of you as a wonderful revelation, as a glorious demonstration of spiritual power, of spiritual individualized force, consciousness and love. It has come proving the identity of your dear ones who have gone before and in making its impress upon your lives and giving you that truth which becomes positive knowledge in your minds that your loved ones live and that they can return to you from beyond the veil bringing their sweet messages and tokens of everlasting affection, as well as of their individualized identity, you have a duty not only toward yourselves but toward your spirit friends and toward the world at large.

Now this duty is for you to, in some way, aid some one else to find this glorious truth that takes away the fear of death from the human heart, that robs it of the terrors of the grave, of shrinking from that which is beyond; the glorious truth which gives a consciousness and knowledge of reunion by and by with the loved ones who have departed from this mortal plane; the grand truth that opens wide the gates of everlasting day and permits you to enter into communion with those who have gone into the glorious light of immortality. All of this, coming to you as it has, bringing a knowledge, brings also to you responsibilities and duties from which you should not flinch, and these duties and responsibilities are that you should in some manner, in some way, try to aid your fellow men in finding this light, in gaining the knowledge, in seeking and gaining that beautiful consolation that takes away the sting and brings only peace.

MANY WAYS OF GIVING HELP.

Now these duties may range in one direction or another. You may be so placed that you come in contact with human beings in different directions and are enabled through your own gift of eloquence and with the magnetism of your personality to so influence your fellow men as to induce them to listen to you and to follow your advice so that they enter into lines of research and through their own investigations are able to gain knowledge of the immortal world. But you may not be able to do this, and you may be one of the sensitives or mediums who can give directly some truth to your fellow man of the immortality of the soul, then you will do this perchance in one way, and another, and so console, and bless, and uplift human beings.

But you may not be a medium, in such degree as will enable you to thus influence or prove to others the immortality of their dear ones, yet in some way you may be able to do something if it is nothing more than giving a dime or a dollar to help someone else give the light and the truth and help to sustain the spiritual press in its great movement of disseminating truth concerning spirit life and immortality.

Or it may be in the direction of helping to feed some sensitive who has done his work, or is trying to do his work in demonstrating the truth of spirit communion to the world; or in giving a helping hand and sympathetic touch to the workers who are going forth here and there for they need your influence and your kindliness in order that they may be better and stronger in their efforts to uplift and bless humanity. In some way you can do good. In some way you can help spread the light. You may not perhaps, assist others in finding the truth in some direction, but you will be able to make the world brighter and better that you have lived, and the only way to find true success; the only way to reach pure and abiding happiness that will never fail under any conditions or in any situation, in any place or clime, is the way of doing right, of reaching onward, of following high aspirations with pure heart in order to gain that which is the noblest of all things.

SPIRITUAL UNFOLDMENT.

Spiritual unfoldment in its sweetest and purest aspect is not always developing mediumship. The development of mediumship, in putting forth those powers and reaching human souls in enlightenment, consolation, instruction and helpfulness generally is of the highest use and it is important and beautiful in value, but one and another may not be able to develop this particular thing called mediumship, but you can all develop spiritually. You can all develop the spiritual faculties and impulses and graces of the selfhood within, and that is higher than the development of mediumship alone; that is grander and sweeter than the unfoldment of any powers that you call spiritual that depend on external expression.

Unfold yourselves spiritually and you will walk in the light. Unfold yourselves spiritually, and you will reach happiness. You will only do right, having no desire to do otherwise. You will only live right, having no temptation to do wrong. You will come in contact with your fellow beings with a sweet influence, an uplifting power, because you will not have anything within yourselves to drag you down; having nothing within yourselves that has not been overcome by the higher forces of spirit and of spiritual helpfulness around you that would otherwise be of the earth earthy, you need not fear contamination in any direction or line of work.

A pure angel from the upper spheres, white-robed and radiant in sweetness and beauty and light coming down amid the slums and degraded conditions of the lower strata of human existence could never be contaminated by the touch and sight. He might walk through these rows upon rows, and fields upon fields of degradation and find not the slightest spot upon the pure white shimmering garment that he wore. A pure-minded angel in a body of earth, ministering to the needy and suffering, giving sympathy and sweetness, the spirit radiating an influence of light that is helpful to other human beings, cannot be contaminated by any condition, degraded by any situation or influence upon this mortal plane, because in spirit such a being is above all these things.

The vibrations of those that are carnal cannot affect those higher forces, for their vibrations are of the light, consequently there can be no contamination, nothing of debasement even though they walk down amid the scenes of vice and sin but they can carry with them into those scenes of sin and vice such an influence of sweetness, such an aura of light, as to reach human souls there which are encased in the crusts and conditions of materiality and of immorality, and bring to those hidden souls something of impetus and stimulation which will enable them to put forth a little of their own powers and light.

WALKING IN THE TRUE PATH.

So then by walking in the true path and seeking the only way to true success and honor and development in spiritual things you will gain power to overcome that which is around you, you may now feel growing strong within because of the power to overcome, and though you are called upon to go through darkened places, through fields of thorns and briars, over rugged steeps, forward in tortuous ways, you will not be contaminated or injured for the spirit within is strong, you individually have gained in power, you are of those who overcome.

He that overcometh shall indeed find the highest of all successes. He who overcometh shall indeed reach the open pathway that leadeth unto life eternal, into happiness that never ends, into splendor that never fades. Angels of harmony, of peace, of love, of ministration, hover all around this mortal sphere. They mingle with you along the pathways, amid your conditions of mortal existence. They walk by your side. They seek to make you know of their presence, but better than all knowledge you can gain of their presence, to them, is the thought that they can help you to overcome, to overcome temptations, obstacles in the pathway of progress, that which binds and limits, that which holds and weighs the spirit down. Thus they are happy. They rejoice, and though you never know they come to you, though you never get one word from them of personal thought and identity, if they can help you into light, to unfold your best powers of right doing and right living, they will rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory; and by your every effort to thus walk onward, to do the best and find the best in life will you walk hand in hand with them over the rugged places, up the steeps of time, through the highways of experience, onward to the grand fields of knowledge, of spirit power, of self conquest, of higher conquests of spiritual and soul life where all is divine, where all is grand and free for the on-marching human entity that is seeking oneness with God, oneness with Eternal Good.

THINKING OF YOU.

When Aurora in beauty awakens the morn,—
And bids the night shadows adieu;
And dew-drops like jewels, the flowers adorn,
Sweetheart! I am thinking of you.

And at noon when the sun-god rides high in the sky,
And I sit in the shade of the yew;
And the birds in the branches go flittering by—
Ah! then, I am thinking of you.

And when I am dreaming of some loving heart,
That will always be faithful and true;
Alas! from my dream I awake with a start—
To find I am thinking of you.

And when the night queen, with her silvery light,
Glides smoothly along in the blue;
And all nature is hushed in the stillness of night—
In dreams I am thinking of you.

"We Are Cowards and Recreants to Duty."

THE BIBLE

New and Revised Edition.

Authenticity, Credibility, Morality.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S GREAT WORK

Ingersoll's desire that somebody should at last tell the whole truth about the Bible has been brilliantly fulfilled. No Freethinker worthy of the name can afford to pass over Remsburg's book in silence. Like Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," may it, let us hope, find admirers and translators in other languages. And again, like Paine's book, may this brilliant work bring to its author the praise of posterity.—Der Freidenker (Milwaukee).

This great work on the Bible by Mr. Remsburg is most valuable—it is an encyclopedia of information in regard to the Bible, and surpasses in importance all other works of the kind now published. It is up-to-date in every particular. Price, $1.25.

RIGHT LIVING

SUSAN H. WIXON,

Author of "Apples of Gold," "All in a Lifetime" "The Story Hour," "Summer Days at Onset," "Sunday Observance," etc., etc.

"Living is an art, a method of expressing great conceptions; in fact, the highest method, the noblest of the arts."—THOMAS STARR KING.

This book gives an admirable course of study in ethics, and supplies a long-felt want of an ethical text-book especially adapted to the comprehension of children, as well as older persons whom it is wisely and appropriately designed to interest while teaching them valuable ethical lessons.

The author shows a wise practicality in her method of teaching the principles of ethics. She illustrates her subject with many brief narratives and anecdotes, which render the book more interesting and more easily comprehended. It is especially adapted for use in children's lyceums. In the hands of mothers and teachers it may be made very useful. Young and old will be benefited by it. It is a most excellent book and should be widely circulated. Price $1.00.

A SYMPOSIUM.

Suggested by Dr. Alex. Caird, of Lynn, Mass.

Massachusetts steps to the front and demands a hearing. Alex. Caird, M. D., an influential Spiritualist, suggests a Symposium on an exceedingly important subject. It will be inaugurated in his special honor as a leading and highly respected Spiritualist of the Old Bay State, one who is constantly working for the spread of the Truth as manifested in Spirit Return. It will prove especially interesting, suggestive and valuable to every reflective mind.

The Important Question.

What Does Spiritualism Teach That Spiritualists Believe in Common?

WHAT SPIRITUALISTS BELIEVE

Dr. Robert Greer Answers the Query, According to His Judgment.

Dr. Caird asks, What does Spiritualism teach that Spiritualists believe in common?

I reply, a great deal. To begin with, all Spiritualists unite in one common belief of human immortality—that the so-called dead live, that the resurrection takes place at death—the death of the body—no imprisonment of the soul, in the grave, awaiting a general judgment day, as taught by biblical Christianity; that all interstellar space is occupied with spirit people, whose all-seeing eyes are upon us, and by whom we are all surrounded; that disembodied human spirits can and do return to earth, manifest to humans, hold converse with loved ones, in dreams and visions, and through the intermediary of a certain class of spirit media.

This is the foundation of Modern Spiritualism, and because of its wondrous and interesting conclusions having been forced upon us, we as a people are compelled to believe therein in common. Hence, we who believe are Spiritualists.

The writer, for instance, being so thoroughly familiar with the charming phenomena of spiritual existence and spirit communion, so frequently seen in his own experience and through his own spiritual vision, could not be otherwise than a Spiritualist.

All Spiritualists "stand pat" on this great foundation principle of Spiritualism.

It is only on the great and wonderful side-lights of Spiritualism that some among us differ.

But Spiritualism—vivacious Spiritualism—having reached its present high development, and antagonizing, as it does, all certain old usages, traditions and ideas, and suggesting new reforms in their stead, makes it little wonder why few among us, or even many, should differ.

All great minds, in some points or other of controversy, differ, most notably in points of politics or religion. Even great scientists, in points of astronomy, the nebular hypothesis, the order of the universe, the causes of earthquakes, etc., differ. And why may not Spiritualists in points of controversy also differ.

But Spiritualists, unlike other people, are never moved by popular prejudice or popular delusions. And why? Simply because Spiritualists do their own thinking.

Practically each human mind exists as an independent unit and is peculiar unto itself and because the power of thought and multitude of ideas are unlimited, each according to his mental calibre or mental illumination will hold to his own religious viewpoints, his own political platform. He may be narrow, nevertheless won't let go till, perhaps, broadened by education or spiritual enlightenment.

All Spiritualists, however, believe in common the following subjects: Law and order, live topics, good morals, the sanctity of marriage, industry and duty, sanitation and hygiene, medical and health reform, social and political reform, elevation of humanity, the Golden Rule, the absurdity of blood atonement or foolishness of the so-called Christian plan of salvation, the everlasting burnings as a divine revenge for Christian unbelief or heresy, the imposition upon the human race and slander upon Deity, by priestcraft, in misrepresenting and libeling Him, in imputing to Him a greater cruelty than that of man, making men actually afraid to die; a demand for justice, the divine healing power, the denunciation of the spiritual counterfeit, the law of love for wife, husband and child, neighbor and friend; to make home happy, to love the beautiful in art and nature, to remember with helpful thoughts and generous deeds our retired indigent and invalid spiritual workers who are at present the honorary pension wards of our indefatigable N. S. A., and lastly, though not least, our sacred obligations to our valuable spiritual propaganda press, in our striving for its larger circulation and a wider distribution of its books of literature.

The spiritual journal is an absolute necessity to every Spiritualist. Those who read its weekly pages are best informed and most intelligent in regard to the phenomena and progress of Spiritualism.

These and more are subjects in which all Spiritualists believe in common.

To know Spiritualism as it really is, to realize its divine presence, to listen to its still, small, friendly voice, to feel its burning words of inspiration, to see, talk and walk with it, as did certain patriarchs of old, to be a daily witness of its magnificent wealth of wisdom, and health and life-giving power, is to take on a new lease of life, wear a broader smile of joy and renew one's confidence in the angelic spirit forces, ever working in the interest of all well-disposed persons, whose aim in life is to do right and live the religion of the Golden Rule.

All persons should study Spiritualism, for of all studies which the human mind can be engaged in, there is none more sublime or wonderful. Such studies will carry one up to the noblest heights, giving sweet and lasting pleasures.

Spiritualism, indeed, on account of its many and great virtues, should be zealously advocated by every one interested in human welfare, and ecclesiastics, especially, for their people's sake, should take interest—active, friendly interest—in its divine propaganda.

In conclusion, the following sentiments in verse, are a fair sample of what all Spiritualists practically believe in common:

"Just keep the heart a-beatin', warm,
Be kind ter every feller;
Look out fer the rainbows in the storm,
But—carry yer umbreller.

"Be brave ter battle with the strife,
Be true when people doubt you;
Don't think that money's all in life,
But—carry some about you!

"An' when it's time to shuffle off,
An' you have done yer mission,
Jest put yer trust in Providence,
An' call a good physician!"

BODY AND SOUL CULTURE.

Continuity of Life and Spirit Communion.

To the Editor:—I feel that Dr. Alex. Caird's article in The Progressive Thinker of Sept. 9, is pre-eminently suggestive, and deals with a question of the most vital importance, for if as asserted, "In union there is strength," then surely Spiritualists cannot have the strength that comes from true union unless the preponderating elements of their belief are held in common at least by the majority. I think the preponderating elements of belief should be such as lead to righteousness, a righteousness born of the recognition of the needs of the body as well as the needs of the spirit, so that in very truth hygiene and physical culture may go hand in hand with soul culture, a physical culture that shall assure perfect bodies and a high intelligence, and a soul culture that shall so direct the intelligence that the spiritual attributes of the man shall be so developed, that they shall dominate the animal in his nature, so that as a spiritual being, even while on earth, he can manifest the Divine and Godlike.

The above taken with the general acceptance of the knowledge of the continuity of life and spirit communion, it seems to me would constitute a basis of common belief broad enough to serve as a foundation for the religion of Spiritualism, and upon which can be builded the religious fabric that shall serve to hold in harmonious union future generations.

I believe that if we can arrive at such a state of common faith in the essentials named, other and inicidental problems will be easily solved and conditions adjusted to meet requirements.

In Spiritualism we have a Religio-Science, a religion in the sense that it "rebinds" humanity into one homogeneous whole, through the influence of the truths it demonstrates; a science in the fact that it offers explicit analysis of natural phenomena, and thus adds to the common wealth of human knowledge, and as knowledge and union of effort are fundamental essentials in human welfare, and are thus supplied by Spiritualism, I am sufficiently optimistic to believe that after another fifty years have elapsed, most of the conditions that we now deplore will have passed away and Spiritualism will have become all that has been promised for it.

Just as fermentation always leads to purification, so will the present agitation in our ranks eventually lead to the vindication and triumph of our cause.

GENERAL SURVEY.

The natural rights of men, civil and political, are liberty, equality, security, property, social protection, and resistance to oppression. Liberty consists in the right to do whatever is not contrary to the rights of others.—Thomas Paine.

Not more surely is the blood quickened and purified by contact with the unbreathed air than is the spirit of man vitalized and made strong by intercourse with the real things of the earth. —John Burroughs.

He that does good for good's sake, seeks neither praise nor reward, but he is sure of both in the end.—Penn.

The funeral of Isaac N. Richardson, one of Washington's best known business men, was held this afternoon from his late home, 1511 S. street northwest. At the conclusion of the services, which were under the auspices of the Spiritualists' Church, the body was taken to Lee's undertaking establishment and cremated. Mr. Richardson died suddenly Thursday afternoon. He had a stroke of paralysis in a cigar store on Fourteenth street, while on his way home and died in his home an hour later. Although Mr. Richardson had suffered from three previous paralytic strokes, on the day of his death he was in apparently good health. Mrs. J. L. Edson officiated at the funeral.—Washington (D. C.) Times.

Mrs. R. S. Lillie, one of our most efficient workers in the ranks of Spiritualism was in Chicago last week. She is a delegate to the N. S. A. convention, and will probably deliver several lectures before she returns to the Pacific coast.

Dr. Beverly writes: "Mrs. O. E. Daniels, an inspirational speaker, held her audience deeply interested Sunday evening at Arlington Hall. Her daughter Florence sang a beautiful solo, and the choir sang some lovely songs. Mr. Peterson and Miss Grey also played several pieces on the piano, wholly under inspiration. Heavenly music produced by inspiration brings fine conditions for the honest spiritual mediums who follow with a message for all present."

"Spiritual Songs for the Use of Circles, Campmeetings and Other Spiritualistic Gatherings." By Mattie E. Hull. Price 10 cents.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charmingly Interesting Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

PART SECOND.

My Dear Martha:—What in this world has become of you? It seems an age since I heard from you last. I hope you have not forgotten the solemn compact we made with our hands on the dictionary and our feet on the hymn books. I am sure this is not very sisterly behavior for one who has thus solemnly pledged herself to be a sister to me! If my father had lived we would have seen each other often, I am sure. As it is, I do think Uncle Silas might come and see his only brother's only child once in a while. Honestly I think it is shameful that you and I have met but once. Well, it was certainly a case of love at first sight!

We are moved at last, and what John ever wanted to buy this place for I cannot imagine. It is a large house and it has an ancient look to it. One could not call it out of repair, and yet I constantly feel that it is. Mother says I am always feeling that something is so or not so. If I believed in ghosts, I should think this house haunted, but I do not believe in them—or at least I suppose I do not. Sometimes lately I incline to the opinion that I do not know what I believe. I have always been told that only the very ignorant believe in ghosts; but Jesus Christ believed in ghosts—was he ignorant? I always felt that the spirits of the dead do sometimes return, and what are ghosts but spirits? I said something of this sort before our minister one day, and he was greatly shocked, or pretended to be. I told him the Bible was full of spirits and their doings, and I got the concordance and proved it, but I might better have saved my breath, for he only said sternly, "For heaven's sake, Miss Marah, do not turn Spiritualist, or have any thing to do with that doctrine of devils."

"Why is it a doctrine of devils?" I asked.

"Because," and he spoke in a hushed and awful tone, "it tramples underfoot the blood of the covenant (what does that mean?) by allowing that all men have immortality regardless of what they believe, and an infidel may enter the realms of bliss side by side with the true believer."

He was so high and mighty about it that he scared me a little for a minute, but I recovered. I know enough to know that high-mightiness never proved anything yet. I don't know anything about Spiritualism, but now I want to. I want to know where the devil comes in. I know I am dreadfully wicked, but I can't help wanting to know things. John told me yesterday that he had a picture of me and when I asked to see it he showed me a sheet of white paper with a big interrogation point upon it. Everybody laughed but me.

I was going to tell you about our new home, so I will begin. I call it real spooky around the edges, and this is what makes me: The next day after we moved here, Mother and John went to the old place and left me alone. I was as busy as could be and did not notice anything queer until I had shut the hall door several times. Then I noticed that there was an old-fashioned latch upon the door, but it would not stay latched. When I was looking at it the latch lifted out of the catch and the door swung open. I went and got a stick, and afterward the scissors, and put in over the latch, but they would fly out and the latch would lift and the door swing open. I never heard anything, but all day I felt as if someone was with me, and after a while I got nervous. Our dog Pete acted very queer several times. He would look straight at nothing and growl and his hair would bristle, and then he would skulk behind me as if afraid.

When I told mother and John about these things they laughed at me. I asked mother if she ever knew me to tell a lie, and she said no; that she did not doubt but what I told everything just as I thought I saw it, but I was afraid at being left alone, and my nervousness made me easily deceived.

Mother ought to know that I am never afraid when alone. I wonder why a truthful person cannot be believed when talking about the supernatural (Is there any such thing as getting above nature?) According to the Bible wonderful things used to occur, and we are told we must believe them even if we can't explain them. O dear, I am all out of fix, so do write soon and explain things to your loving

MARAH.

P. S.—John has just brought me your letter telling me about your stay with Aunt Laura. He had the letter in his pocket all the time I have been watching for it and blaming you. He is a dear good brother or I would be very angry with him. You blessed little saint! I am very glad about the way things have come into your life and yet I feel in my bones you have severe trials before you, but you will conquer —something tells me you will.

Are you going to call yourself a Spiritualist? I shall admire your courage if you do. I am wanting to know something about Spiritualism, and here you are right in it. Isn't it queer how things come about?

Our part of the world is mostly inhabited by people who have no religion to speak of unless something new is introduced, and then every old sinner will have a pious spasm and roll his eyes and shake his head and cry, "Infidelity!" which seems to be the worst sounding word he can think of, and which is supposed to ostracise the one against whom it is hurled, and reflect a certain sort of sanctity upon the hurler. Do write and tell me all about your engagement. M. W.

Spruce Grove Farm.

My Dear Marah:—It is with a breaking heart that I come to you to-night. I am glad that I know I will have your love and sympathy. There is no one but you to whom I can go excepting Aunt Laura, and she is away just now. O dear, it seems to me as if everything is happening just now. I came home happy and everything looked bright and beautiful. Father and I talked about my experiences and what had happened at home during my absence, and we had so much to say that we were a long time getting home from the depot.

Father said I better not mention the subject to mother, for she had said that she would not believe in Spiritualism if she knew it was true. Father said he was not prepared to express any opinion farther than to say he did not think the manifestations we had seen were to be explained by human agency, devils, trickery or imagination. He said he was prejudiced against the name Spiritualism, and he did not want my name associated with it.

That hurt me, for I know that it stands for all that is pure and helpful and true and good, and if others do not see it so, it is because they do not understand it.

Charlie is much better, but the doctor thinks he may always be an invalid, but it seems to me I cannot, will not have it so. The dear boy was delighted to see me, and told me all about the strange happenings here. He told me a good many things our parents do not know. He said he did not dare tell anybody but me lest they think him crazy.

Mother told me the next day that she asked the doctor if Charlie's mind was all right, and he said "yes." Charlie is not sick, he is all over that; it is a dreadful lameness and it cripples him.

I went to Uncle Ezra about the first thing I did, and I told him all my experiences and how I wanted to work for the cause of truth, and asked his advice. He said that a person's ability to do great things was usually measured by their willingness to do little things faithfully. He told me to rely upon no spirit but my own for guidance; to observe and follow its leadings without a fear, for it would never lead me wrong. He said that I would draw to myself a class of spirits in harmony with my real self and earnest desires, and they will help me if I need help, but advanced spirits are never meddlesome and never seek to vaunt themselves nor their medium. He told me never to obey any one in the flesh or out if they advised or commanded me to do what my own spirit disapproves of. He said not to be in any hurry about going to work but await the guidance of the spirit and follow it carefully and the work will come and the way open as fast as I am fitted for it.

I came home a little disappointed, but I feel that he is right. When we want things to go a certain way we always like to find some one to encourage us in thinking that they are going to go that way. I once heard Mrs. Austin say that most of those who seek a medium do not want to hear the truth unless it is agreeable to them. I do not want to be like that. I want to know the truth, if it upsets every hope I cherish.

O, Marah, dear, there is no use trying to put it off any longer, but I don't know how to tell you what has happened. I feel so lonely and desolate, and I can't see why it need to have been so. If you knew how I feel tonight you would never call me a saint again; and yet I want to do just right more than anything else—or I think I do.

In my last letter I told you all about my engagement to Clifton Lee, and now I have to tell you that it is broken all over, and—O Marah, I thought he loved me so much and I was going to be so happy.

In the letters I wrote to Clifton while I was with Aunt Laura I never wrote a word about Spiritualism, but I knew the first time he came to see me after I got back home I ought to tell him and I was such a coward I dreaded it. The next day after I got back he came to see me and we went down the road for a walk and I told him some of the things I saw and heard while I was away. He listened attentively and when I stopped talking he said, "Who is this Mrs. Austin? Isn't she a Spiritualist medium?"

I trembled so I could hardly stand, but I said, "yes."

"Then," said Clifton, "she is a bad woman and she has bewitched you."

"Oh, no; you are greatly mistaken," I said. Aunt Laura knows Mrs. Austin very well and she says she is the purest and best woman she ever knew."

He looked at me sternly and said: "That shows what sort of a woman your Aunt Laura is. Martha Weston, I am surprised at you! Everybody knows that the mere fact of a woman's calling herself a medium proves she is anything but what a woman ought to be."

I was so surprised at his words that I did not know what to say for a minute. I had never thought of such a thing, and it seemed to me that I would choke to death; and then a strength came to me and I stopped trembling and said: "How many mediums have you ever known? Please tell me that."

His face flushed and he said angrily, "I never knew any, and I never intend to. I prefer to keep respectable company."

"Then," said I, "you know nothing about the matter."

He caught my hands in his and looked at me, and his face softened, and he said tenderly, "You poor little girl, you are more to be pitied than blamed, for you are too innocent to understand, I am ten years older than you are, child, and know the world much better than you do or have any right to. You will get all over this infatuation now you are away from it, so we will think no more about it."

He kissed me and I broke down and cried. Just at that minute I heard Charlie calling me, so I had to go back home but I cried most all night. I know it was very foolish, but I couldn't help it.

The next day mother got a letter from Clifton's mother asking us to come over the next day but one and stay all day. Mother was real pleased, but for some reason I dreaded it, but of course I had to keep still about it and go. Mrs. Lee and Clifton were real kind and pleasant. They live in a big house and it is beautifully furnished. I had never been there before but I have always heard mother speak of them as being "worth a good deal of property," and I think it had more to do with her pleasure at our engagement than anything else. I never thought much about the money, but when I got into the house I began to feel the great difference between Clifton's home and mine. I always loved pretty things, and Mrs. Lee has lots of them.

Encouraging Report of the Condition of the Cause.

To the Editor:—It is some time since I have taken up your valuable space, nevertheless I thought possibly your readers would like to hear what progress our beautiful truth is making in this city and neighborhood. The First Spiritualist Association of this city is in a very prosperous condition, in every respect, rapidly increasing in membership and correspondingly financially. We have a large surplus in our treasury, under the guiding hand of our untiring and self-sacrificing president, Henry Brunhaus, and vice-president, Brother Schaub, a man of great intellect and influence, supported by a board of trustees which reflects great credit on the members in their selection, these are facts, not written in a boasting manner. Also another very important auxiliary is the Ladies' Aid, with Mrs. H. Brunhaus and M. E. Norrington as leaders, by their untiring efforts have greatly helped us to reach that position and influence we did not expect to reach so soon. And last but not least I would say, through the administration of our late pastor, and medium, Rev. G. W. Way who, the past years, has proved himself one of the most gifted men that has graced our rostrum. Brother Way's great hold on the people was his wonderful power in giving messages, different from many mediums; through his guides he would narrate events, and give names, that carried conviction to the skeptic and cheered the believer.

At the opening of our season we have been fortunate in securing the services of that well-known and deservedly popular speaker and medium, Rev. Nellie S. Baade, of Detroit, Mich., whom we have engaged for three months. Mrs. Baade is a grand speaker and test medium and is being received by large audiences who listen to the beautiful and instructive utterances that fall from her lips, while under spirit control. A great feature in her lectures is, she takes her subjects from her audience. Our society is to be congratulated on securing the services of this talented and noble woman, and we look under her guidance, for a continuous revival of our loved cause in our midst during her stay with us.

THE PSYCHOGRAPH OR Dial Planchette.

This instrument is substantially the same as that employed by Prof. Hare in his early investigations. In its improved form it has been before the public for more than twelve years, and in the hands of thousands of persons has proved its superiority over the Planchette, and all other instruments which have been brought out in imitation, both in regard to certainty and correctness of the communications received by its aid, and as a means of developing mediumship.

Do you wish to investigate Spiritualism?
Do you wish to develop Mediumship?
Do you desire to receive communications?

The Psychograph is an invaluable assistant. A pamphlet with full directions for the FORMATION OF CIRCLES AND CULTIVATION OF MEDIUMSHIP with every instrument. Many who were not aware of their mediumistic gift, have, after a few sittings, been able to receive delightful messages. A volume might be filled with commendatory letters. Many who began with it as an amusing toy, found that the intelligence controlling it knew more than themselves, and became converts to Spiritualism.

Capt D. B. Edwards, Orient, N. Y., writes: "I had communications (by the Psychograph) from many other friends, even from old settlers whose gravestones are moss-grown in the old yard. They have been highly satisfactory, and proved to me that Spiritualism is indeed true, and the communications have given my heart the greatest comfort in the severest loss I have had of son, daughter, and their mother."

Dr. Eugene Crowell, whose writings have made his name familiar to those interested in psychic matters, writes as follows: "I am much pleased with the Psychograph. It is very simple in principle and construction, and I am sure must be far more sensitive to spiritual power than the one now in use. I believe it will generally supersede the latter when its superior merits become known."

You should not send money in a letter. You may do so a dozen times safely, and then the next remittance may be lost or stolen. Secure a postal order for five cents, and then you are perfectly safe, and will save yourself annoyance and trouble.

The Progressive Thinker.

In many respects it is a marvel, a miracle in Spiritualistic journalism. This number of the paper is worth more than ONE DOLLAR to every reflective mind. Look at the first page, and read about C. Bailey, the wonderful medium. We give the latest account in reference to him. Then read "An Object Lesson," dealing with "Legerdemain in Spiritualism." It contains a large amount of food for thought. Then see what Dr. Peebles has to say of "Spiritualism and the Old Pyramids." Then study "Moses and the Prophets." Very valuable.

Then turn to the second page and read the soul-stirring address through Mrs. M. T. Longley, the efficient secretary of the N. S. A. It is full of grand spiritual truths.

Now you come to page three, and you will find something worthy of note in the Symposium. Especially you will be interested in reading "The Light Among the Hills," by that gifted lady, Mrs. I. L. Lewis.

On the fourth page you will find "Something for the World to Consider."

On page five, there is another "Object Lesson," touching on the blight that has fallen on the Chesterfield Camp. Carefully answer the question, "Are You Awake?" And then follows "THE CELESTIAL CITY," published in one of the initial numbers of The Progressive Thinker about sixteen years ago. Do you think you have a through ticket?

Now turn to the sixth page and read the masterly report of E. W. Sprague, one of the foremost workers in our ranks.

On the seventh page is an impressive account of the grand work accomplished by two of our most efficient workers, Hudson Tuttle, Editor-at-Large, and J. W. Ring, National Lyceum Superintendent.

On page eight you will find something thrillingly interesting about the little boy, Willis Miller. You will also find on the same page a "Curious Psychological Study," in connection with the notorious "Shepherdess of Paradise."

On pages nine and ten there is a mine of valuable information in connection with the martyred president, ABRAHAM LINCOLN. It is very valuable.

On page eleven is a masterly essay, "Sees God as a Master Scientist." Give it a careful perusal.

On the last page, the twelfth, is a splendid article by Henry Morrison Tefft. He is a philosopher, a poet, a profound thinker, and is tuned to the keynote of Col. Ingersoll.

There are many other articles and items of special interest scattered through the various pages that we have not space to mention.

We ask every subscriber to send in one new name to aid us in the grand work we are doing to promote honest mediumship and a pure Spiritualism.

The National Association.

We have no advice to give the N. S. A. delegates. They are leaders in the movement, and have established views and well digested plans, and will, we have no doubt, do a most excellent work for our Cause. The N. S. A. is needed now, and we have no fear as to the result of the present convention.

Something for the World to Consider.

THE BEAUTY AND GRANDEUR OF SPIRIT RETURN.

Spirit Return is one of the greatest boons that ever came to mankind.

It has illuminated the world with a light divine.

It has established the important fact that the spirit survives the death of the body.

It has banished the orthodox devil, extinguished the fires of hell and made a medium of Jesus—simply a man like other men, possessing no more power than the ordinary mortal and giving utterance to nothing new.

It has enlarged the horizon of the spiritual vision, and made a HEAVEN in harmony with existing facts—a heaven given to man, and which corresponds in all respects to his own life and aspirations—no better, no worse.

It has dissipated many errors which existed as the basis of superstition and ignorance.

It has brought to the world a higher and nobler conception of Deity and placed the angels of LIGHT AND LOVE in close touch with mortals.

It has entered the palace of the king, the hovel of the poverty-stricken, the cottage of the peasant, placing the occupants on the same level in respect to spiritual favors.

It has healed the sick, saved people from disasters and brought consolation to the bereaved mourners.

It has influenced legislation, resulting in placing humanity on a higher plane.

It entered the White House at Washington, threw an angelic influence over the immortal LINCOLN, culminating in his issuing the Emancipation Proclamation, freeing millions of slaves.

Yes, Spirit Return, when controlled by the wise sages of the spirit realms, becomes the Savior of humanity, the tidal wave of spirituality and truth that will eventually sweep over the entire earth. Spirit Return, however beautiful, grand and ennobling it may be, at times, is simply the result of a natural law, and each one must see to it, that the ignorant and vicious do not assume control of any of our mediums.

THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER AND TAINTED SPIRITUALISM.

The Progressive Thinker in Open Revolt.

In the course of ordinary events in connection with every movement with an "ISM" attached to it, or not, there comes a strenuous REVOLT, and without its systematic and vigorous action there would be no progress—only a calm that paralyzes human actions and purposes as time passes on.

See the political REVOLT in Philadelphia, in consequence of the corruption of the city officials—a current of putrid dishonesty encircling every department of the city government like a slimy serpent, until the very air was tainted with its poisonous aura. Then a REVOLT came and without it Philadelphia would have become worse, if possible, than Sodom and Gomorrah.

The REVOLT is the potent instrument of all reformers.

That "ism" known as Spiritualism was, to a certain extent, losing its prestige and its commanding influence, in consequence of certain fakes, rotten to the core, using artificial toggery, often unclean, with which to enrobe their pestilential bodies, and thus dressed pretending to be your spirit friend. The Progressive Thinker will continue to lead in a REVOLT against these fiends of darkness, these vampires, these unclean monsters of Spiritualism, these "birds" of prey, whose dark seances are often holes of iniquity, dens of vice, and licentiousness.

At the Chesterfield camp the devotees of the Blue Book, the fake trumpet and materializing mediums combined against The Progressive Thinker. Materialized fake spirits and bogus trumpet spirits were loud in their denunciation of this paper, and in consequence of their deceptive work a blight has settled over that beautiful camp like pestilential miasma from a swamp.

The Progressive Thinker is in open REVOLT at the iniquity that has pervaded our ranks, and demands a PURE SPIRITUALISM. It demands materialized spirits that are not dressed in artificial toggery; it demands tests not recorded in the Blue Book of the vandals that infest our ranks; it insists that legerdemain shall not pose as an angelic gift. It defies this horde of villains that enter into competition with honest mediums, the angels of purity, and the bulwark of our cause, the evangels of light and love, and who should be protected at all times.

DIVINE DISCONTENT AS A PURIFYING AGENT.

The Chicago Herald says that poets and reformers of all ages have extolled "DIVINE DISCONTENT" as the source of human progress. Satisfaction with things as they are would spell STAGNATION—RETROGRESSION IN FACT—FOR LIFE IS MOVEMENT, and not to go forward is to go backward. But there are two kinds of discontent, and the kind that is laudable and essential, is fitly described as "DIVINE." The DISCONTENT which leads to selfish, sordid, reckless pursuit of wealth and power is demoralizing, anti-social, destructive of all that is best in life. DISCONTENT manifested in violation of public and private trust, in immoral and QUESTIONABLE TRANSACTIONS PROMPTED BY GREED, such as the insurance inquiry is disclosing, puts before the younger generation—in President Schurman's words—"a distorted view of life". The country needs nothing so much as a reversion "to the old ground that a man's life consists not only in the attainment of the world's possessions, but in the development of the BEST CHARACTER AND POWERS THAT ARE IN HIM." Material prosperity is a curse when it is accompanied by intellectual and moral deterioration, by the worship of success, no matter how achieved.

Dr. Hirsch, like Dr. Schurman, pleaded for higher and nobler standards of life and conduct. He emphasized, however, the danger and folly of self-sufficiency, the need of DISCONTENT with one's self, primarily. The life of the man who knows nothing higher than business and diversion is scarcely above the animal plane. The life of the man who has no profound sense of reverence, of beauty, of mystery, is poor and barren. "He who has not progressed beyond the self-satisfied attitude," to quote Dr. Hirsch, "will find himself as little able to understand and grapple with the mysteries of life as the little child who has just finished the primer is able to appreciate the glories of a Shakespeare, a Dante of a Goethe."

DISCONTENT, like charity, should begin at home. It should take the form of self-analysis, of conscious searching, of self-criticism. Such discontent will lead to the change in the public spirit, in the general estimate of life's values, which President Schurman rightly holds to be the supreme need of the day.

If Spiritualists are not possessed of the DIVINE DISCONTENT with some features of Spiritualism as they are today, then you invite STAGNATION and SELF-DESTRUCTION. Those speakers who have sunk into the self-satisfied state, and do not want denunciation of wrong in our ranks from the rostrum, on camp grounds or at Spiritualist's meetings, do not realize the beauty and grandeur of DIVINE DISCONTENT, and the necessity of continuous REVOLT against errors that are ever a menace to success. A healthy DIVINE DISCONTENT always leads to a higher plane. If you want deception as practiced in our ranks to day, let alone, then at once petition our government to allow all kinds of food to be adulterated with impunity; and let us all go the free and easy way to "hell," and pass the spurious coin with the genuine.

SPIRIT RETURN FREE TO ALL, THE WORLD OVER.

Spirit Return, however, does not depend for its existence on conventions, on meetings, on "isms," on Spiritualist papers, or the approval of any class, club or cult, however useful they may be. They, however, may become beneficent, and efficient agents in promoting its healthy growth and development, just as a plant or flower in the garden may be rendered far more vigorous and beautiful by the constant care and attention of the gardener. Left entirely to itself, the flower or plant often becomes tarnished or destroyed by poisonous insects or microbes.

SPIRIT RETURN is the root, the foundation or basis of a certain word which has an "ISM" attached to it, and which in the estimation of many, does not properly belong to it as an appendage, on account of the many odious features connected with it, as in Catholic-ISM, Pagan-ISM, Heathen-ISM, Sectarian-ISM, Dowie-ISM, Free-loveISM, and hundreds of other "isms" that do not shine brightly in connection with human progress. But whatever may be the status of Spiritualism at the present time, the N. S. A. can and will be an efficient agent to place it on a higher plane.

THE LIGHT OF PUBLICITY CRITICALLY CONSIDERED.

The Kansas City Journal well says that "while there are alarmists who see in the recent disclosures of corruption in high financial and commercial circles the knell of our national prosperity, it does not require visionary optimism for the great majority of Americans to view these recently uncovered scandals both with equanimity and with a certain degree of satisfaction. To the intelligent, observing citizen IT IS A HOPEFUL SIGN, INDEED, A CONCLUSIVE INDICATION, THAT THE BUSINESS WORLD IS VINDICATING ITSELF AND IS RENDERING TO ITSELF THAT TREATMENT, WHICH WILL IN THE END BRING ABOUT CLEANER, HEALTHIER AND MORE ETHICAL METHODS. The revelation of graft and general misconduct among officials of some of the large financial institutions of the country means that the disease with which they have so long been afflicted can no longer be concealed. The symptoms developed externally and thus became a source of public concern. THE LIGHT OF PUBLICITY, LIKE A REVIVING FLOOD OF SUNSHINE, HAS ENTERED THE MALIGNANT ATMOSPHERE OF GRAFT-INCUMBERED COUNTING-ROOMS AND IN THE END THE WHOLE BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL WORLD WILL FEEL ITS BENEFICENT EFFECTS."

The same too, may be said of Spiritualism—THE LIGHT OF PUBLICITY, LIKE A REVIVING FLOOD OF SUNSHINE, has entered the seance room, and revealed wigs, false whiskers, draperies of various kinds, to cover the body of the medium, and this is called "materialization." What is the remedy for this awful crime?

THE GREAT ABUNDANCE OF ADVICE.

Advice is an exceedingly cheap commodity, it is so plentiful, walking around on two legs, and sometimes, if strictly followed by the recipient may lead to ruin and occasionally to death. To advise the delegates of the N. S. A. as to their united duties would be a superfluous task just as they are about to assume their respective places on the floor.

A body of delegates that convenes without a well DIGESTED plan, are liable to be "at sea," and rather dyspeptical, and accomplish but little, and generally disband disgruntled, and advice by one who is on the "outside" will not be considered a valuable article to use in connection with the proceedings, hence we will not venture even a modicum of advice.

A Question and Answer Submitted to the Delegates of the N. S. A.

The Progressive Thinker is not only in REVOLT against Legerdemain Spiritualism, but it is in OPEN REVOLT against this answer to an important question by a would-be leader, Willard J. Hull. The Question submitted to him, and his answer are as follows:

QUESTION.—"What is the end and aim of mediumship as carried on at present?"

ANSWER.—"Its aim is Dollars, and its end is Death. Mediums who are really carrying the messages of the higher realms of spirit life to man the mortal can be counted on the fingers of a single hand."

"Only four mediums on earth today really carrying the messages of the higher realms of spirit life to man," says this pretentious, egotistic leader. ONLY Four Mediums! What do you think of that sentiment, Spiritualists of Chicago? What think you, Mediums of other parts of the United States? Your "aim" is the almighty dollar, and your end is "death;"—a disgraceful one, of course. We are in OPEN REVOLT against that sentiment—that slander of honest Mediums, our angels of light on this earth at present. And yet this swaggering lecturer reels off a column of advice in his organ of frauds, to the Delegates of the N. S. A., each one of whom is his superior. What think you, Delegates?

It Is Well Worth One Dollar.

This number of The Progressive Thinker is worth at least ONE DOLLAR to Every Spiritualist. But One Dollar will pay for it one year, and the information imparted during that time will be of great value to every thinking mind. Now is the time to renew your subscription. Sometime during the next year we expect to have something to say about which will stir Spiritualism from center to circumference, stir it as never before, and the intellectual sparks will fly all along the line, affording a pyrotechnic display of wisdom never before witnessed in our ranks. Subscribe for the paper at once or be left in the rear of the advancing column.

PERSONAL.

This enlarged issue calls for no personal encomium. If you appreciate our effort for the Cause, express it by sending in your subscription without delay.—Editor.

CHICAGO SPIRITUALISTS' LEAGUE.

A Report of the Last League Meeting.

The October meeting of the Chicago Spiritualists' League, held in Handel Hall, Saturday evening, October 7, proved to be an enjoyable one from the opening number on the program to the closing one. The audience having joined in the opening hymn, President Warne introduced Dr. J. H. Randall, who made an invocation full of inspiration and uplift.

Miss Inez Light then favored the audience with a vocal solo, appropriate in character and rendered in a sympathetic manner.

The lecture of the evening, delivered by Mr. John W. Ring of Galveston, Texas, was a strong appeal for Spiritualists to realize the mission of Spiritualism, as a factor in the personal development of the individual, rather than a philosophy based on theories. The need of the hour is for men and women who have learned to apply the teaching of the angelic ministry in the social and economic problems of every day life, and it was for the purpose of presenting these facts that communion between the two worlds was established.

Mr. Ring is not a stranger to Chicago audiences, but the message which he so logically and eloquently delivered, opened up a new field of thought and inquiry to many present.

Miss Gilda McCoy was then presented and captivated all with a vocal solo. The range and quality of her voice is marvelous, and her success was made apparent by the generous applause accorded her.

The first message bearer of the evening was the well-known South Side worker, Mrs. Isa Cleveland. The messages were given in her usual convincing way, her control, White Star, being a general favorite.

The next worker was Mrs. Dr. Caird of Massachusetts, who for a short time is in the city. Her phase, automatic writing, has never been presented from the League platform, and awakened interest and approval from all present.

Dr. Burgess, the well known West Side medium, then gave a few clear cut messages in his own inimitable way, and the meeting adjourned.

The November meeting will be held Saturday evening, November 4, with Dr. J. M. Peebles as speaker.

H. F. ARNOLD.

A Plagiarized Production.

The so-called "Lord's Prayer" is given as a model for universal use. "After this manner pray ye," are the words credited to Jesus, Matt. 6:9, and the inference is that he formulated that prayer.

Dr. Adam Clarke, the Methodist commentator on the Bible, in his annotations on verse 13 of this chapter 6 of Matthew, says:

"The very learned Mr. Gregory has shown that our Lord COLLECTED this prayer out of the Euchologies, and gives us the whole form as follows:

"Our Father who art in heaven, be gracious unto us! O Lord our God, hallowed be thy name, and let the remembrance of Thee be glorified in heaven above, and in the earth here below! Let thy kingdom reign over us now, and forever! The holy men of old said: remit and forgive unto all men whatsoever they have done against me! And lead us not into the hands of temptation, but deliver us from the evil thing! For thine is the kingdom, and thou shalt reign in glory for ever and for evermore."

That this is a faithful rendering of the original Hebrew, from which "Our Lord" extracted his prayer, will be evident to every reader. In these days the use of such matter, without any reference to the source from whence it came, or some statement showing it was borrowed, is called a plagiarism, a literary theft, and that fact militates severly against him who quotes it as his own. It may be we should be generous when a junior God makes such drafts on the labors of his predecessors. But it would have been courteous, to say the least, for even a God to give credit where credit is due.

My Beautiful Little Friend.

ROBERT GLEN.

Here is pretty little "Bobbie," and in years he is just two;
Don't you think that you could love him with all the love in you?
Do you wonder that the highest of my being lingers there,
Like a humming-bird in hunger round a flower, sweet and rare?
Do you sense the inspiration in that face and angel smile?
Do you wonder at the tinting of my poems for awhile?

He is not my own wee "Bobbie," only as the world is mine,
But the height of joy he gives me is a touch of the Divine.
And I live my life all over, with the added strength that time
And experiences afford me, in a world of dream sublime.
He has touched my passing spirit with his little angel hand,
And my soul seems re-illumined with a brightness pure and grand.

I can hear his sweet voice calling, in a wave of sound divine,
And I always feel his spirit ere his baby lips touch mine.
In the form we may be parted; ah! a shudder comes o'er me!
But my soul will hear him calling back wherever he may be:
"Kaka! Kaka!" No, no, Kaka! No-no Kaka! No, no work today,"
For he always knows my presence means a joyful spell of play.

Still—I could not be so selfish as to hold him far away
From his parents, who must miss him, for a year or for a day,
Though I sadden in my thinking how my heartstrings will be drawn,
When my precious little "Bobbie," with that angel smile is gone,
And I sense the coming darkness to succeed the sunny light,
And the lonely dream now haunts me as a gloomy, dismal night.

But there is a spark of brightness that shall linger evermore,
And I know it will illumine my lone spirit o'er and o'er;
'Tis the rays of light extracted from this little shining star,
And 'twill light my lonely pathway in fond mem'ries from afar.
I am living on the nectar of his childhood's sweetest days,
And I know, if I am conscious, I shall see that face always.

DR. T WILKINS.

SPIRITUALISM BORN OF WISDOM.

It is difficult to realize the real advance Modern Spiritualism has made since its first known manifestations through the Fox Sisters, and the simultaneous production of those first books through Andrew Jackson Davis. It is difficult to get a statistical record of the membership of an unorganized institution; in fact there is no way to do this with Spiritualism. It would not do to measure it by the membership of the N. S. A., even in the United States, for that matter, though a representative organization, a factor for the advancement of the cause as an organized body, it represents only a small proportion of the actual believers in Spiritualistic philosophy and phenomena. Almost as well let the State of Illinois represent the whole nation in Catholicism or Protestantism.

The membership, even of all local societies and N. S. A. auxiliaries, but slightly represents Spirit Return in its entirety, yet the N. S. A. IS A GREAT AND IMPORTANT FACTOR IN SPIRITUALISM, AN EFFICIENT AGENT FOR GOOD, A NECESSITY IN OUR RANKS TO-DAY, A POWERFUL LEVER TO ELEVATE THE CAUSE TO A HIGHER PLANE, AND CANNOT BE DISPENSED WITH.

Spiritualism proper began with the Hydesville knockings, and its advent, the dawn of the New Era, dates from that time, and all who have been convinced of the possibility of spirit return and intercommunication between the two worlds, are in fact Spiritualists, regardless of any Declaration of Principles or the signing of a roster, or organization paper.

This is not intended to reflect upon the necessity for organization or the real purpose of the N. S. A. SPIRITUALISM HAS NO DOUBT RECEIVED AN EXTRA IMPETUS THROUGH THE ORGANIZATION AND MAINTENANCE OF THE N. S. A.

It has stepped up alongside of other institutions that would never have given it recognition had it not been an organization.

It has pushed its way into the category of religions.

It has placed itself in the ranks of science, and as a philosophy has entered almost every pulpit in the land and subdued the fires of old theology.

It has wormed its way into the best literature of the day.

It has never yet been monopolized by an organized body of men, nor been owned and watered by a trust.

It stands to-day free from any creedal fastenings; has not yet become a money-getting institution, not even to the building of gaudy temples over the land, and is bound to gain prestige with the world through its incontrovertible truth.

It has gained the attention of the world's most profound philosophers; aided in the discovery of the best inventions of this progressive age; grasped the hands of royalty and cheered the lives of peasants.

IT HAS BECOME A GREAT FACTOR TO HUMAN INDEPENDENCE, ENLIGHTENMENT AND HAPPINESS; NOT BECAUSE IT WAS ORGANIZED; NOT BECAUSE IT CAME THROUGH THE FOX SISTERS, BUT BECAUSE IT IS A FACT, A TRUTH.

No manner of persecution can hinder its progress. No amount of fraud in its sleeve can prevent the playing of the right card at the right time. The fraud belongs to man and is a mere side issue arranged and operated along the commercial line.

Spiritualism is a fact, managed and manipulated by a wise power, or rather, in true wisdom, without fear or favor, impartial, independent, far-seeing, large and just.

Evil spirits may obsess and injure an occasional medium. Jesuits upon the spirit side may seek to destroy the characters of our best speakers and mediums for the purpose of aiding their own organization upon both sides of life, but the very fact that they can influence mediums, becomes of itself convincing proof of the phenomena of spirit intercourse, and knocks the props from beneath their own proposition.

SPIRITUALISM IS AN ATTRIBUTE OF NATURE AND AS SUCH HEEDS NOT THE SLIGHTEST INCIDENTAL OBSTACLES THAT ROLL DOWN FROM THE MOUNTAIN SIDE IN ITS PATH.

An occasional being rises up in our midst and shouts his wisdom toward the sky, as though that great canopy must be touched by his profoundness, and the sun must pause to listen and to learn from his burning words. He is still lisping the "a-goo"—baby talk—of his infancy and will learn, if he struggles on and on through the coming ages, that he was but a unit in the great evolutionary process, after all.

Spiritualism without fraud; Spiritualism without obsession; Spiritualism, pure and simple, can hardly be expected in this world, and if man enters the next sphere as he leaves this, it cannot even be expected in that very soon.

If we would help to purify we must cleanse our own spirits, raise the moral standard of our lives and assist others in the same direction. If we would make it a religion we must give it the touch of the divine, the beautiful, the perfect.

If it be a science it only needs the cold facts, regardless of any moral or ethical standard.

As a fact, demonstrable, mathematical, analytical, it needs nothing moral or ethical in its support. But as an institution to appeal to the finer, and the higher forces, the soul of man, we must keep it in the trend of human thought, in the crucible of spiritual purification.

Upon this sphere of life those who live upon the intellectual plane are little affected by their contact with the immoral ones. So long as their aspirations hold them in the realm of thought and reason; so long as they are engrossed in the solution of some scientific problem, or studying things pertaining to the soul and its higher relations, there comes to them no thought of immorality. Sometimes the mind may accede to the desire of the form and be called away on a vacation, a diversion, only to return to its task with redoubled energy.

Wisdom means more than morality. It means knowledge of right and wrong, discernment and judgment; discretion; sagacity; scientific or practical truth; acquired knowledge; erudition, etc. It means capacity to weigh, measure, analyze and judge as to true morality, or scientific problems, and when we say there is wisdom back of Spiritualism, we do not mean any one mind, but a united purpose in nature's intellectual forces.

Were it wise, Nature would make it possible, and even natural for each individual to see the entire road before him from birth to death and beyond, but this is left obscure. Sometimes our spirit eye catches glimpses of a coming event, but in the main our futures are kept a secret; and who can say it is not wise? Who wants to know and suffer twice the tortures, the woe and pain that comes along in a natural life?

Wisdom says it is right to be moral and sets a standard in each individual according to the mental and spiritual unfoldment, and organized individualities, society, sets a standard of morals, a code of laws by which society shall be governed. Sometimes wisdom controls, and sometimes selfish individuals control and the laws are enacted accordingly. If not constructed with true wisdom they must sometime be reconstructed, amended or annulled.

That which is a wise code in one age may not suit the conditions of another age.

Spiritualism seems to be the natural outcome of the unfoldment of human perception and spiritual wisdom, through the experiences and observations of those who have passed through the preceding ages of earth life and have graduated from sphere to sphere beyond. It looks like Infinite Wisdom was back of this great movement.

New theories, philosophies, isms and fads spring up like mushrooms, cut capers and pass out of sight and almost out of mind, but Spiritualism, the culmination of events, mysteries, spirit appearances, necromancy, witchcraft, etc., of all the past ages, has set its stakes, had its filing recorded, and settled down to stay.

The wisdom in which it was begotten will either sweep it free from the filth and dregs of an age born in the old superstitions and false conceptions of supernaturalness, or waft it through the turbulent sea of charlatanry and obsession, into the new world of reformed and re-educated peoples, clean and pure, and the one great organization of the spiritual forces of earth and spirit life.

AN OBJECT LESSON

For Spiritualists Generally to Consider.

SINCE MR. L. O. HULL, A PROMINENT SPIRITUALIST OF FORT WAYNE, IND., GAVE HIS IMPRESSIVE EXPERIENCES AT THE CHESTERFIELD CAMP, OTHER PROMINENT SPIRITUALISTS OF THAT STATE HAVE FREELY EXPRESSED THEIR OPINION OF THE FAKE SPIRITS MANUFACTURED THERE, AND A SORT OF MILDEW HAS SETTLED ON THAT FAVORITE PLACE OF RESORT, AND WHICH WILL BECOME MORE DENSE IF A CHANGE OF PROGRAMME IS NOT INAUGURATED. CAUSE AND EFFECT GO HAND IN HAND, AND IT IS ONLY A QUESTION OF TIME WHEN EVERY CAMP THAT PATTERNS AFTER CHESTERFIELD DURING THE PAST TWO YEARS, WILL SUFFER NOT ONLY A DEFICIT, BUT A DARK PESTILENTIAL CLOUD WILL SETTLE OVER IT. SUCH A RESULT IS INEVITABLE.

NOT GENUINE MATERIALIZATIONS

A Very Impressive Experience of An Earnest Investigator with a Medium Who Was Prominent at the Chesterfield Camp—A Fake Veil—An Interview With Fake Spirits—Under the Circumstances, Is it any Wonder That This Beautiful Camp Has a Blight Resting Upon It, Resulting, This Year in a Deficit?

I was much interested in the article in a late issue of The Progressive Think, by L. O. Hull, of Fort Wayne, Ind., especially so because about two or three months ago I wrote for your readers the following, which I hesitated to send you, as there had been so much already said and written about fakes, bpt as the communication of Mr. Hull seems to refer to the same persons whom I had an experience with, I will send it to you:

Probably two years ago I attended the Spiritual Temple at Anderson, Ind., and there received what I then believed (and still do) were genuine spirit messages, under the following conditions:

As far as I know there were only two persons in the Temple who knew even my name, one of these persons went to the Temple with me and the other was seated in the auditorium when we arrived.

Seated in a semi-circle on the platform was A. J. Blake and several others, none of whom I had the least acquaintance with; two of them were supporting a trumpet, and any one who wished went forward to receive any message that might come from loved ones "gone before." With others, I responded to the invitation and the voice of an old man informed me that my grandfather was talking to me. I said, "Grandfather whom? Simply grandfather tells me nothing."

Immediately the voice responded, "Grandfather Channing." Then after a few more words the voice changed, and a woman's voice said she was my mother; then a child's voice said she was my daughter. All this in the auditorium of the Temple, well lighted and ready for the evening services.

I recount this only to show that I was now in a condition to fully accept anything that might in the future be given to me through these mediums, and I began to occasionally attend their seances, which were held at the residence of Mr. Blake, in Anderson, and consisted of trumpet, independent voice, etherealization, the playing of music boxes, etc., and later, materialization(?) (full form). All went well for some time, but I finally became suspicious, principally for the reason given by Mr. Hull, that "the medium could not hide her shape."

On Sunday night, November 13, 1904, in company with Dr. O. B. Thomas, his wife, my wife (who is a sister of Mrs. Thomas) went to the home of said Blake, where we found quite a number waiting to have a "seance." We went up stairs to a room especially [illegible] for a seance room. The circle was formed and the light was arranged (a lamp in a box the front of which was covered with tissue paper, I think). Mr. Blake sat at one end, Peter LaBelle and wife at the other, while the balance of the circle was made up of our crowd, and six or seven others. Mrs. Blake went into the cabinet. Soon the spirits (?) began to materialize for several in the circle, then the lady came, who, by gestures, made me understand that she came to me. I then asked if it were my sister. I was informed by a nod of the head that I was right. I then said: "You passed out in England." Nod. Then she began to motion, in imitation of a person writing, and some one said she is writing. I said, "Oh, yes, I think that I understand that she wishes to make me understand that she was with me last week at the hotel in Buffalo when I was registering my name." More nods, and evidence of the greatest pleasure that this was understood, when after promising that she would return and talk to me by the aid of the trumpet, after this part of the seance was over, she returned into the cabinet. After a short time a lady came to Mrs. Thomas and then to all of our company. She was recognized as Julia, a dear friend of Mrs. T's. I said to her, "Julia, have you your little boy with you over there?" In a whisper she said, "Yes, all here."

Soon a little boy came, whom I recognized (?) as my little son, Freddie, who said he also would talk to me later.

Next an Indian, fierce in his make-up, of paint, feathers, etc., came to me. I arose and offered to shake hands with him across the stand, and I thought at first that he would do so, as he extended his hand toward me; then evidently thinking better of it, stepped a little backward; but not quickly enough to prevent me noting that while his face was extremely dark, the hands were much lighter than mine. (So are Mrs. Blake's.)

The next thing of interest was the materialization of a spirit veil, or as we were informed the material from which the spirits make their clothes

This was the second time during the evening that the same veil had been materialized and passed around. The first time I tried to tear a piece from it, but it was too strong for me, so you will note that the spirits do good work in making silk veils. This time I had my pocket scissors transferred to my outside coat pocket, and cut off a piece, and I still have it. It is a good quality of silk veiling; only from having been used so often it is quite dirty and A LITTLE THE WORSE FOR WEAR.

After materialization was over a voice announced itself as Freddie. I had forgotten all about him, but someone brought me to my senses by saying, "Doctor, Don't you remember your little Freddie?" Whereupon I introduced him to his mother, and after quite a nice visit he left (and so were we.)

NOW, IN FURTHER EXPLANATION, I NEVER HAD A SISTER ANNIE, AND AS FAR AS I KNOW HAVE NO SISTER IN THE SPIRIT WORLD. I HAVE NOT BEEN IN BUFFALO SINCE THE PAN AMERICAN, AND NO SON NAMED FREDDIE, EITHER LIVING OR DEAD. JULIA WAS A SINGLE YOUNG WOMAN AND NEVER HAD A CHILD.

NOW, BROTHER FRANCIS, KEEP THE GOOD WORK GOING ONWARD. RID THE RANKS OF ALL THE FAKES YOU CAN. FROM MY PAST EXPERIENCE I AM LED TO BELIEVE THAT ABOUT ALL OF THE SO-CALLED MATERIALIZATION IS FRAUD, PURE AND SIMPLE.

I do not mean to say that there never has been and never is any true materialization, but I do not believe that there is any genuine at 50c. or $1.00 per head; but when our dear ones do manifest themselves to us the phenomena are spontaneous, and then only occasionally, and then probably for some specific purpose.

The Passing On of Asa Bullock.

Asa Bullock, of Hobart, Ind., met with an accident which resulted in his passing out of the body on Sunday, September 24. Mr. Bullock was a lawyer of some prominence in Hobart, Lake County, Ind. He was driving from his home to Crown Point, the county seat, to attend court. When he came to a turn in the road an automobile met him; they did not see eachother until too late for either to stop.

They were sure to meet, which would perhaps, be fatal to the occupants of both carriages. In order to prevent a worse calamity, Mr. Bullock reined his horse to one side, which upset his carriage and threw him down an embankment of eighteen feet. The carriage came down on top of Mr. Bullock, breaking his hip and one leg in two places, and internally injuring him. He lay several hours before they could get a conveyance to take him home. When an ambulance came to extricate him and take him to where he could have medical aid, he would not allow one to touch him, or the carriage until they thoroughly examined his condition, and took all necessary measurements of the distance he fell, and made notes of his chances of escape, and of the faet that if he had not pulled his horse to one side he would have been killed, and in fact everything an attorney would need should the case come into court. Then, after they started home with his poor bruised and broken body, he dispatched a messenger to inform his family that he was being brought home almost dead.

He was soon informed that his only chance for life was by undergoing a surgical operation, which he did, but to no effect.

Mr. Bullock was a son-in-law of mine, having married my daughter Cynthia in 1874. He was the father of a large family, to whom he was greatly devoted. He was respected by all who knew him. The flags on the school houses and other public buildings were floated at half mast.

The funeral occurred in the Unitarian Church, which was filled to its utmost capacity. Mrs. Hull made the opening invocation, Mrs. M. Florence Johnson, rendered the beautiful poem "Discipline," and I delivered the discourse, taking for my text, the words of David, "As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, there is but a step between me and death." After the discourse the Masons conducted the services.

Mr. Bullock was what would be called an agnostic. He knew nothing of another life. If there is a life beyond, he wanted it, if not he was perfectly willing to share the fate of others who had gone before him, and still others who are to follow after. His country was the world, his religion, to do good.

Mrs. Bullock and the sons and daughters are Spiritualists. While they mourn the loss of husband and father, they do not mourn as without hope. They think they have already had indications that he is with them.

Moses, Mr. Bullock's eldest son, who was in the law school at his father's death, has left the school and been admitted to the bar, and has taken up his father's practice, and has the promise of the support of his father's clients.

MOSES HULL.

A Loving Tribute to Asa Bullock.

How strange it seems to think thy unfettered feet
Now tread the paths of that more real world;
That all thy mortal trials now are past,
And all thy earthly counsels have been told.

We do not call thee dead, we know sometime
That we shall see the shadow of thy hand,
And hear thy voice, know thy gentle tread
Within the home, and we shall understand.

We know amid thy new experiences
Thy loved and loving, thou canst not forget;
They oft may dream of thee 'mid mysteries
And still, they know that but a single step
Would take them to the realm where thou hast gone;
Thou art so near, they do not feel alone.

A Few Words With the Thousands of Our Interested Patrons and Readers.

The Progressive Thinker is never to be found in the rear. It has ever been a success in the matter of furnishing to its readers each week something elevating, something interesting and educative; something for the soul to feast upon and for the mentality to advance by. It has furnished occult, moral, healthful, ethical, scientific and genuine spiritual food, and all the historical data of the wonderful spiritual manifestations recorded in the secular press.

It has ever been blessed with a corps of able, ready, profound and energetic correspondents, and looks upon each as one of the family—one of the partners who shall share in the most lasting remuneration derived, the most important benefit receivable—that of the credit for the brilliant light of truth shed abroad to enlighten the world as to a future state of conscious existence. It has also furnished a new and highly appreciated book each year, and is now furnishing twelve of the best books to be found relating to Spiritualism and kindred subjects, at the mere cost of printing and binding.

Such an extraordinary proposition has never before been carried to success, and now we have

Another Proposition to Offer:

This week we are publishing a TWELVE-PAGE instead of an eight-page paper, to herald

Our Fall and Winter Campaign and promise that if our already large list of Subscribers can be increased by the addition of 5,000 Extra Yearly Subscribers, We Will Enlarge Permanently to a 12-Page Paper.

We prefer to enlarge our capacity to educate the world at the same rate of subscription, rather than reduce the price upon our present

Largest Spiritualist Paper in the World.

The Progressive Thinker is not launching out upon the sea of political, religious or social fads, nor is it floating any wildcat scheme to get the financial co-operation of the people.

Its Fundamental Basis Is Pure Spiritualism!

Look over the past policy and methods of The Progressive Thinker and see if they have not been clearly right and successful.

To diminish the price of subscription would be to cheapen its quality and curtail its facility for good; whereas, to enlarge its capacity means to better represent the rapidly expanding Spiritualism of today, and at our own expense. But with the addition of

5,000 New Yearly Patrons

We will make a paper that will astound the foes and enthuse the adherents of Spiritualism.

Which Will Best Represent Spiritualism? Is It Declining, or Advancing?

It is plain to be seen this move will cost the proprietor an extra amount of money and labor, but the Cause must be properly represented, and that is the first consideration.

It will not be hard work for each present subscriber to send in one more, and in this way make it possible to permanently establish a

The Celestial City.

The Method Pointed Out Whereby You Can Obtain a Through Ticket.

There is a beautiful Celestial City, exceeding in grandeur and magnificence the loftiest conception of poet and seer. There are a few of earth's children who have in sublime moments of ecstasy caught a glimpse thereof, thrilling their souls with unutterable emotions of delight. To Bishop Bowman was accorded this inestimable privilege. On one memorable occasion he appeared to be dying—standing midway between heaven and earth. He seemed to be on a magnificent ship, and he heard the captain say, "Stop her!" and which he thought to be the voice of his Divine Master, when his eighteen-months'-old child, who had passed to the spiritual realms twenty years ago, came to him, and said, "I have come to meet you." She asked him, "Do you not think I have grown, papa?" She then seemed to assume a form of glory that he had never before witnessed, saying that many friends had asked for him, and were awaiting his coming, and that a lady and gentleman had kissed her, saying that her papa was their boy. "All this," says Bishop Bowman, "left a deep impression upon me, by the magnificence of the surroundings, and it was a season of great preciousness to me. It seems to me that I have come back from the other world."

Bishop Bowman only caught a faint glimpse of the Celestial City. No mortals of earth, while sojourning among the turbulent scenes of this state of existence, ever fully beheld the ineffable glories of the Celestial City. Not one of them has ever fully seen its magnificent streets; its grand parks; its fountains which scintillate with rainbow-tinted hues; its beautiful gardens; the flowers of which send forth a pleasing incense, and which speak a divine language. They have only caught a faint glimpse thereof. Angels are there; the great and good of generations long past and gone, are there; the Divine Master is there; but whether a Jesus, a Vishnu, a Brahma, a Confucius, or one whose soul is brilliant with the grandeur of a God, exalted by virtue of his innate goodness—we know not. Toward that Celestial City all humanity are tending. "In my Father's house are many mansions," and it may be, for aught we know to the contrary, that the Golden Route to the Celestial City is like a graded school; it may have apartments in which each one of God's children will find a place exactly adapted to his intellectual and moral status.

Have you a ticket to this Celestial City, where God's goodness, God's charity, God's love, God's benevolence and God's justice, are manifested in every passing breeze; in every flower that smiles in tinted colors; in every drop of the water of bubbling fountains which are illuminated with a light that sparkles with the lustre of the diamond; in everything that the spiritual eyes can behold there are the manifestations of a God.

Yes, have you a ticket to that Celestial City? Perhaps you belong to an aristocratic church; you accept the Bible as the word of God; you regard Jesus as the Savior of the world, and you have been baptized, and have unbounded faith. Alas! that is not an available ticket to the Celestial City. It will not carry you to the first station; it will not even take you out of the earth-depot. You cannot purchase a ticket that will take you there. The fabulous wealth of an Eastern prince could not alone secure a passage to that place. Perhaps Vanderbilt and Gould would like to secure a through ticket, but they cannot.

The Celestial City is connected with the earth by what we designate as the Golden Route Spiritual Railway; yet no minister of the gospel, no church member, no Moody and Sankey, and no Spiritualist can ever fully control it. There are no ticket agents on earth; no one can give you a pass there. It is doubtful whether a Talmage, with his magnificent wealth of intellect, or a Theodore Tilton, with his brilliant eloquence, can take passage thereon, when they shall have laid aside the mortal body, and be conveyed at once to the central depot.

The Celestial City has no bonded indebtedness; no watered stock; no corrupt officials; no cesspools of vice—it is the home of angels; the home of the pure, the good, the true. Are you bound for that city? Have you tried to secure a ticket thereto?

There was a terrific fire once, where we were temporarily sojourning. Oh! how the flames went skyward, as if so many demoniacal tongues issuing from the pits of hell! There was precious human life in that building; and only one remaining egress of escape. Who would ascend the swaying ladder?"

All, seemingly, was lost!

There came from the hissing flames the tender, pathetic wails of human beings, and they lingered on the breeze, as sad as the refrain of a funeral dirge, and then an infidel—a brave, generous-hearted infidel—sprang forward, rushed up the frail ladder, and at the peril of his own life, saved three lovely children from the fierce fire! He gambled; he was tricky; he was bad, it was said, yet in some respects noble and tender-hearted, and kind, at times, and that heroic deed will secure him a ticket towards the beautiful Celestial City. He will be at the earth depot when the last summons, Death, shall come; he will walk up to the heavenly train, and ask for a ticket to the Celestial City. An angel of God will give him one to proceed just as far as all his acts of life combined entitle him to go, and no further, and engraved thereon will be: "Saved three precious human lives from the fire!" Thus it is, good deeds count with the Lord, from whomsoever they emanate, and good deeds only secure you passage on the Golden Route to the Celestial City.

What have you done to-day? Have you cheered some poor, faltering soul? Have you encouraged the disheartened? Have you sent forth kind thoughts, laden with an incense that renders some one cheerful and happy? If so, you are nearing the Celestial City; nearing it, because you are paying your passage from station to station, and approaching the final end.

Alas! there are Bibles many; there are thousands of churches; there are hundreds of devotees who sincerely and devoutly expound the word of God, yet many of them are not approaching the Celestial City by so doing. God's tickets, God's passes, God's permits, to a ride by the Golden Route to the Celestial City, cannot be gained by only preaching. Something more beautiful—more grand—more soul-elevating, is required. There are sermons in running brooks, in the singing of birds; in the grand expressions of nature; in the unfolding of a bud into a beautiful blossom, and its final development into luscious fruit; but above all, there is a grand potential sermon in a kind word to some poor mortal, supplemented by substantial aid.

We knew old Aunt Martha well. She was ignorant; she was uncouth; she was coarse in form and ungainly in her general make-up; yet there beamed from her eyes and glistened from her features a grandeur of soul that was truly sublime. She never prayed; she never sang psalms; she never attended prayer-meetings; she never tried to understand the word of God. One day, a stranger in the village where she resided was taken down with small-pox, and carried to a lonely pest-house. In vain, for awhile, the officials tried to secure someone to attend to his numerous wants, for he was nigh unto death. Did the high-toned volunteer to go? No! Did the wealthy men of the town offer their services to a poor, suffering man, in dire distress? No! Finally, Aunt Martha, as she was called, stepped forward, and volunteered to nurse the sick stranger.

She went to the lonely pest-house; she breathed its poisonous air; she endured its inconveniences, and bravely administered to the one in need. As she bent over that dying man, for at last the disease gained the ascendency, her eyes seemed radiant with the impulses of an angel, and her coarse features, in the sight of that sufferer, were beautiful! As she cooled his parched lips, fanned his fevered brow, and rendered his last moments comfortable, there went forth from his lips a plaintive, beautiful prayer, that heaven would treat Aunt Martha tenderly, and make her last moments on earth comfortable and happy. What grander scene than that! Talk of bravery on the battlefield—the heroism of Aunt Martha was nobler and more angelic! And when she, one dark, dismal night, calmly administered to his last moments, and closed his eyes in death, her grandeur of soul surpassed the loftiest imagination of the children of earth. The ascended spirit of the one she had nursed was there; angels were there; kind guardians were there, and, for aught we know, Jesus himself might have been there.

What a glorious triumph for that old woman, as she changed her clothing and returned to her humble home! Did the church get up a reception for her? No! Did many flock to her side to congratulate her? No! They were afraid that there was a taint of the disease left on her person.

But there are angels who look into the hearts of men and women. They don't gaze therein for a Bible; they don't look therein to see if they have said their prayers; they don't examine one's heart to see if the sacrament has been performed; they don't peer into the record to see if each one has been baptized; they don't look to see if praise to God has been regularly indulged in. They only examine the deeds of each one! They surveyed that old woman! They looked into her soul, and it was beautiful; there was a garden there, full of flowers, on which were written, "Goodness!" And what did they do when this noble-hearted soul was taken sick, died, and buried in a pauper's graveyard? Why, they gave her a through ticket to the Celestial City.

If you want a ticket to that City, be good and do good. If you are a father, be kind and loving to your wife and children; speak kind words only. Make each one around you feel happier and better, and by so doing, you, too, will approach nearer and nearer the Celestial City, and, perhaps, even while on earth, you may be able to catch a glimpse of angels, and hear the melodious music that emanates from heavenly harps.

Remember, then, will you, please, that there are innumerable stations on the Golden Route to the Celestial City! Ministers, or even Spiritualist don't always have a through ticket; church members are often tumbled off at the first station, with instruction how to reform their perverse, selfish natures. The millionaire may not be able to reach the second depot in a hundred years, and the proud and exacting have got a divine lesson to learn before they can even catch a glimpse of the radiant features of old Aunt Martha.

Eye Glasses Not Necessary.

Eye Sight can be Strengthened, and all forms of Diseased Eyes Cured without Cutting or Drugging.

That the eyes can be strengthened so that eye glasses can be dispensed with in the great majority of cases, has been proven beyond a doubt, by the testimony of thousands of people who have been cured by that wonderful little instrument called "Actina." Actina also cures sore and granulated lids, Glaucoma, Iritis, etc., also removes Cataracts and Pterygiums without cutting or drugging. Over seventy thousand of the Actinas having been sold, therefore it is not an experiment but an absolute fact. The following letters are but samples of those that are received daily:

Mrs. M. E. Champney, 242 West 125th St. New York City, writes: The "Actina" cured me of Iritis, after the doctors said there was no cure outside an operation. I have been entirely well for over four months, can see to read and sew as well as before. I can honestly recommend "Actina" for all afflictions of the eye.

Emily Kapp, 1920 Galena Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, writes: The "Actina" I purchased from you a year ago saved my brother's eyesight. My brother was near-sighted, wore number five and six glasses, and now he can go to school and do all his work and study without glasses.

E. R. Holdbrook, Deputy County Clerk, Fairfax, Va., writes: "Actina" has cured my eyes so that I can do without glasses. I very seldom have headache now, and can study up to eleven o'clock after a hard day's work at the office.

Actina is not a drug or lotion, but a small pocket battery, which can be used by old and young with perfect safety, as it is impossible to do any harm with Actina. Every member of a family can use the one Actina for any form of disease of the Eye, Ear, or Throat or Head. Actina will last for years, and is always ready for use. Actina is sent on trial postpaid.

ENCYCLOPEDIA ... OF ... BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM ... OR ... A CONCORDANCE

To the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism;

Together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible.

BY MOSES HULL.

Much that is in this book appeared in an abridged form in a series of nine full pages of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. These articles were prepared at the call of hundreds of Spiritualists who felt the need of some kind of document for ready reference. They only seemed to whet the appetite for more; hence the publication of this work.

The author, Moses Hull, has written many volumes on Spiritualistic and other themes and each one is full of careful study on the subject chosen. Mr. Hull, in his introduction of this work says:

"Hoping that this book will serve to lead the people out of the wilderness of doubt and despair; and that when Spiritualism shall have wrested the Bible from its 'sanctified' enemies, it will not 'spike' it, but will use it to batter down the walls of Christian superstition and ignorance. I send it out on its errand of enlightenment with the humble prayer that it will prove a divine benediction to every reader."

The Annual Report of N. S. A. Missionaries.

To E. W. Sprague and his wife, as N. S. A. Missionaries, and as medium and lecturer, persistent and true workers in the cause of Spiritualism, is due the praise of the spiritualistic people of the whole nation. They have indeed proven themeslves amply fitted for the work to which they have been assigned.

N. S. A. MISSIONARIES' REPORT

For the Year Ending September 30, 1905.

Mr. Chairman and Fellow-Delegates:—Another year of great activity in the movement to advance the cause of Modern Spiritualism has passed.

The work of the year has been crowned with good results. The truths of Spiritualism have been carried to thousands of earnest seekers for truth.

The organization of Spiritualists into a working body of business men and women whose purpose is to render helpful service to mankind and to each other, as well as to investigate, teach and demonstrate the truths of the Spiritual philosophy, was a happy thought, as experience has shown.

During the year we have visited a larger number of states than in any previous year of our missionary work.

We visited New York, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Washington, Oregon, California, Utah and Nebraska.

We held 261 meetings; organized 19 societies, including two Ladies' Aid societies; wrote 900 letters and traveled 14,000 miles.

We attended the N. S. A. convention at St. Louis, Mo., the Michigan State Convention at Lansing, Mich., and took part in a state mass-meeting at Topeka, Kans. We also added many new members to old societies that we visited.

The new societies that we organized are located in the following states: Ohio, 1; Missouri, 2; Kansas, 3; Wyoming, 1; Montana, 2; California, 2; Washington, 1; Oregon, 3; Colorado, 3, and New York, 1. Total, 19.

INDIANA.

We began the work of the year in Indiana, serving the society at Lafayette.

ILLINOIS.

In Illinois we served the societies at Farmer City, Bloomington and Decatur, and held the first Spiritualist meeting ever held in Pinckneyville.

MISSOURI.

We held meetings in St. Louis, St. Joseph and Union Star, Mo., organizing a fine local society and a Ladies' Aid auxiliary at St. Joseph, and held the first public Spiritualist meeting ever held in Union Star.

KANSAS.

We held meetings in Troy, Ft. Scott, Spring Hill, Lawrence, Topeka, Herrington, Sterling and Hutchinson, Kans. Ours were the first Spiritualist lectures ever given in Troy or Herrington. We organized new societies at Lawrence, Herrington and Spring Hill.

WYOMING.

At Sheridan, Wyoming, we held two meetings and organized a good society. Mrs. F. D. McCormick, the president of the Montana State Spiritualist Association, and her good husband, planned and arranged for these meetings at Sheridan.

MONTANA.

We visited Billings, Livingston and Butte, Mont. At Billings, the home of the McCormicks, we remained eleven days and held 15 meetings. The number in attendance, as well as the interest in the meetings, increased with each succeeding meeting. Mrs. Sprague held one meeting for ladies only, and also organized a Ladies' Aid Society. Much good was accomplished at Billings.

Mrs. McCormick preceded us to different places in Montana and arranged for our coming, but we were stricken with the smallpox at Livingston and Mrs. Sprague was taken to the pest-house at Butte, and Mrs. McCormick was also taken suddenly ill at Anaconda and had to return home. For these reasons the work in that state was given up for the time.

When we recovered and Mrs. Sprague was released from the pest-house, we bid a glad farewell to this great mining city and traveled on into the state of Washington.

WASHINGTON.

We visited Spokane, Seattle and Tacoma. At Spokane we spent eight days, held twelve meetings, and organized a fine society. Spokane has plenty of excellent home talent and this society should certainly prosper.

Mr. R. F. Little, the very efficient and enthusiastic president of the Washington State Spiritualists Association, arranged for our coming to Seattle, where we spent one week and held six meetings.

The Spiritualists of Seattle have one of the finest and best managed societies; they also have plenty of good home talent and are enthusiastic.

Mr. George E. Knowlden, secretary of the Washington State Association, and one of our best workers, arranged for the two meetings that we held in Tacoma. Mr. A. J. Kenton of Puyallup, the treasurer of the Washington State Spiritualists Association, with his good wife were present. These meetings were well attended and considerable interest was beginning to manifest itself when we were obliged to leave for other fields.

OREGON.

Rev. G. C. Love, president of the Oregon State Spiritualists Association assisted us in the good work, arranging for meetings in Portland and taking part in them.

We spent four days in Portland and held four meetings there. Two were held in Drew's Hall and two in the home of "The World's Advance Thought." Mrs. Lucy A. Mallory, the editor of this excellent Spiritualist newspaper, kindly invited us to hold the meetings there. She is one of the tried and true, and has kept her splendid paper busy making its regular visits to thousands of homes in this and in other countries for nearly a quarter of a century.

We attended a meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society of Portland one afternoon. We were called upon for remarks, when without even asking permission, we created considerable surprise by raising over one hundred dollars for the building fund of that society.

We spent fifteen days in Oregon, visiting Portland, McMinnville, Corvallis, Cottage Grove, Medford and Ashland. We organized new societies at McMinnville, Cottage Grove and Medford.

Spiritualist ministers are refused clergy rates in Oregon. When President Love protested against such treatment, and asked the reason for it, he was told that the railroad officials did not recognize Spiritualism as a religion. This matter should be attended to and the mistaken officials should be enlightened.

CALIFORNIA.

We visited Dunsmuir, San Francisco, Cupertino, San Jose, Santa Cruz, Santa Barbara, Summerland, Montecito, Fresno, San Diego, and Los Angeles.

We organized societies at Dunsmuir and Fresno and held the first public Spiritualist meeting ever held in Dunsmuir.

The Spiritualists of San Francisco accorded us a hearty welcome to their beautiful city. We were royally entertained in the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Shaw Gillespie. Mr. Gillespie is the president of the California State Spiritualists Association, a good business man, a natural leader, a well informed and active Spiritualist.

Mr. and Mrs. Gillespie called us to San Francisco and much credit is due them for assistance in making our meetings a success.

Mrs. Gillespie is the pastor of the People's Church of that city. She has labored long and faithfully, without money and without price, building it up from nothing to a substantial and successful society.

Mrs. Gillespie is also the conductor of a fine lyceum. We have had the pleasure of witnessing her work in the lyceum, both in the east and in the west, and have no hesitancy in pronouncing her one of the best lyceum teachers in the land. It would be a great help to our movement if the Morris Pratt Institute were to establish a class in lyceum work and graduate lyceum teachers. They are greatly needed.

Our Sunday meetings in San Francisco were held in the spacious hall of the People's Church, and the Ladies' Aid Society kindly assisted us in the week-day evening meetings, which were held in their hall. The members and attendants of both of these societies are in full sympathy with the good work of the N. S. A. as was proven in many ways and not least by their generous subscriptions to the Mediums' Relief Fund.

Mr. W. T. Jones, editor of the Philosophical Journal, and Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Howe, editors of the Occidental Mystic, through the columns of their valuable papers and otherwise did much to assist us; all of which was highly appreciated by your missionaries.

We held two meetings with the society at San Jose, spent three happy days at Sunny Brae, held four meetings with the Santa Cruz Society, stopped over night at Santa Barbara, where we learned that the once flourishing society of that place had failed and nothing was then being done in a public way to advance the cause in that city. We spent a very pleasant day in Mr. and Mrs. Lillie's home in Montecito.

At Summerland and San Diego we found good societies owning their temples and doing fine work. San Diego has one of the finest temples in the West.

Mr. S. D. Dye, who is one of the respected members of our National board, and his good wife, assisted by Mrs. Nettie Howell, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, and the officers and members of the Truth Seekers' Society of Los Angeles, called us to that place to assist in the three days' anniversary services. The nine meetings held there proved very successful in every way. Large audiences were in attendance, and on Sunday evening, at the closing service, some went away for lack of room, though our hall was a large one.

The lectures, messages and music were excellent, and were received with enthusiasm and applause by the audiences.

A nice little sum over and above expenses was realized, and both the Truth Seekers' Society and the N. S. A. were profited thereby, and furthermore forty new members were added to the Truth Seekers' Society.

UTAH.

Owing to a misunderstanding caused by a letter going astray, we arrived in Salt Lake City one week earlier than we were expected. This so disarranged our plans that we only remained there two days and then moved on to Colorado.

COLORADO.

We organized new societies at Grand Junction, Leadville and Denver, and also held meetings in Glenwood Springs and Colorado Springs. Ours were the first public Spiritualist meetings ever held in Glenwood Springs; a good society may be organized there with a little of the right kind of work.

NEBRASKA.

We spent three days at South Omaha and moved along into Iowa.

IOWA.

We stopped at Oskaloosa, where we found a good working society. We held four meetings there, then visited societies that we had previously organized at Bloomington, Ill., Peru and Rochester, Ind., Sandusky and Elyria, Ohio, stopping at Alliance, Ohio, for three meetings, and went home to rest and enjoy our vacation.

July found us again on the wing. We organized a society at Uricksville, Ohio, served the Elwood, Ind., society and held a three days' grove meeting at Millburg, Mich., then went to Chesterfield, Ind., where our camp-meeting work began.

CAMP-MEETINGS.

We filled engagements at the following named Spiritualist camp-meetings: Snowflake Camp, Central Lake, Mich.; Chesterfield, Ind.; Vicksburg, Mich., and Ashley, Ohio. These meetings are all doing their usual good work for the cause, and the interest seems to be increasing. At most of them the attendance was larger than last season. All of them are in sympathy with our organization. A collection for the benefit of the N. S. A. was taken at the three first-named camps, and a National Association day was advertised in the Vicksburg program with Rev. Thomas Grimshaw and your missionaries as speakers. This meeting was well attended and the presentation of the good work of our organization was gladly and enthusiastically received.

The managers and workers at all of our camp-meetings are entitled to great credit for their perseverance, enterprise and loyalty to our cause. The great success of the camp-meetings is their reward.

At the close of our work at the camp-meetings we filled an engagement Sundays and Thursday of September with the society at Watertown, N. Y.; meanwhile we held three meetings at Lafargeville, N. Y., and organized a society there.

Taken altogether, we have been able to stand the work this year better than we expected at the beginning; though Mrs. Sprague was obliged to forego giving private readings almost entirely; this was a great disappointment to many of the friends.

FINANCIAL REPORT FOR YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER 30, 1905.

Expenditures	$2,188.82
Receipts	1,624.56
Deficit	$ 564.26

Aside from the above report, we raised for the Mediums' Relief Fund, $180.99.

Notwithstanding the fact that we covered a much larger territory than last year, our expenses are less and receipts more this year.

MISSIONARY WORK NEEDED.

It is certainly true that missionary work is much needed in every state where we have labored; and undoubtedly this may be said of every city, town and village within these states.

Much might be said regarding the benefits of the missionary work, as well as the necessity for it in the building up of our organization. The results of our work of the last five years is a great object lesson.

The states in which most of this work has been done, now have the best and most successful organizations under the National Association, and this has been largely accomplished through the missionary work. It is impossible for any State Association to be built up or sustained without missionary work.

Other religious denominations, much older than ours, realize this and still have their state or district and National missionaries.

We know full well that our organization would grow much faster if we were able to place two good, capable missionaries in every state and keep them at work there.

MICHIGAN STATE CONVENTION.

We attended the Michigan State Convention held at Lansing, August 15, as delegates. This State Association owns a fine Mediums' Home. It was largely donated to it by Mr. John F. Goff. It was deeded to the state association before his death. When he passed away he left a will in which he bequeathed property to the amount of about $28,000 as an endowment fund for the support of the Mediums' Home. This will is now being contested in the courts, and that convention had to devise ways and means to carry the case to the Supreme Court of the state of Michigan, where it is confidently believed that the will may be sustained.

We succeeded in raising nearly $150 at this convention for that purpose, and when we left Lansing things looked favorable for the Spiritualists to continue the suit.

Whether we lose the suit or not, the Michigan State Spiritualists Association own their Mediums' Home and it is free from encumbrance, and must—according to the deed—always remain so. All this would not have been possible without organization. The object lesson here given is this: It is better to give while we are here, then we will know that our gift will not be spent in a law suit, but will be used for that which we intended.

MEDIUMS' CIRCLES, ETC.

There are, undoubtedly, more home circles being held at this time than at any previous time in the history of Spiritualism. It is not an uncommon thing to find three or four or a half-dozen different circles for development being held in a small town.

Thousands of mediums are being developed, though most of them, for one reason or another, work entirely in private; however, new mediums for various phases are coming into the public work from time to time.

The publishing of "The Great Psychological Crime" and the prolonged debate upon the subject of "Obsession," together with the discussion of the subject of "Fraud" by friend and foe, has, in some measure, discouraged mediums in their development, but we think this will not be lasting. In fact these are but passing clouds reflecting their shadows for the moment; following them the sun will shine clearer.

The consideration of all these questions may prove beneficial in the end, though for the time being it makes it harder for the mediums.

THE FRAUD QUESTION.

The fraud practiced by an occasional pretending physical medium does not injure our cause as much as that other class of rascals do who advertise extensively in our great dailies, circulate flaming posters, etc., telling the public that they are "the greatest clairvoyants, palmists, astrologers," etc., "on earth" and "can read everyone's life like an open book," "tell whether wife or husband is true or not," "bring back lost lovers," "develop any phase of mediumship desired," "find stolen property, hidden treasure, oil wells and gold mines." "Terms fifty cents and up."

These conscienceless creatures infest the cities and towns of this country in swarms, not a place of any size that has not been visited time and time again by them. Some of them have gained the confidence of their intended victims who are usually persons who know but little or nothing at all about Spiritualism, and in its sacred name, through one method or another, rob their victims.

At Denver, Colo., we met the License Collector who told us that if we, or the National Association would help the city to find a certain man whom he named, we would confer a great favor upon the people of Denver and besides, the city would reward us therefor.

This worse than highwayman had posed as a great clairvoyant, astrologer, palmist, etc., and through his subtle arts of devilishness possessed himself of $500 of one widow's money, and $1,000 of another's, under the pretext that their spirit husbands wanted him to invest it where they should direct, and it would bring their widows "big returns."

After getting possession of the money this "crook" left town, and Spiritualism is blamed for the robbery.

This and sundry other tricks and fraudulent practices in the name of mediumship and clairvoyance, coupled with the claim of being the greatest "mahatmas," astrologers, "palmists," etc., "in the world" have been practiced in St. Louis, Mo., Rockford, Ill., several times, Peoria, Ill., at least four times; in each case these robbers carried away a large amount of money. In Danville, Ill., there were two cases in which they got six hundred dollars of innocent people's cash. In Bloomington, Ill., several cases occurred in which good people were robbed of hundreds of dollars. In fact we find such cases of this kind wherever we go, and probably not one case in a dozen ever comes to light, as people are not generally anxious to let the public know how they have been deceived by these frauds.

All of this rascality is laid to Spiritualists and mediums, and is the real or greatest reason why Spiritualism is not more popular with the outside world. Mediums and Spiritualists are fighting this evil constantly, and yet they must bear this humiliating burden, terrible as it is; the innocent must suffer for the guilty.

We hope this convention will pass resolutions condemning these practices, in the strongest terms, and by so doing furnish the evidence to all that such nefarious works have no more relation to mediumship or Spiritualism than falsehood has to truth.

CITY LICENSES FOR MEDIUMS.

The councils of a number of cities have sought to get rid of these frauds and have taken a very strange way to do it, viz.: by granting them licenses to practice. This is just what the fakirs want. The license fee is nothing to them. The privilege of working in a town, where they plot and scheme unmolested, is of great value to them. On the other hand, the license fee placed upon a poor medium is an unjust burden. Some of these cities, however, do not collect a license fee from mediums who have credentials from the N. S. A.

Mediums do not wish to become violators of the law; nor do they wish to give up their work, neither should they be obliged to submit to this injustice. Some action should be taken by this convention that will lead to the removing of this burden from the shoulders of our mediums.

False statements regarding the N. S. A. and its work have been industriously circulated. They evidently originated with the frauds who are not able to get the endorsement of our state and National associations.

One of these false statements accuses the N. S. A. of being opposed to phenomena; another that the organization has fallen into the hands of the frauds and is carried on by them for the purpose of making money. These stories and many more equally as false, have been doing injury to our cause, and the Spiritualists were glad when we came and proved by the resolutions adopted at every National Convention, and by its Ordination Usages, etc., that it upholds every phase of mediumship, and furthermore, endorses and protects those that are worthy and qualified.

We think that a copy of the Ordination Usages of the N. S. A. should be placed in the hands of every medium and speaker in the land, and that every Spiritualist should inform himself or herself of its contents. Its adoption was a movement in the right direction.

STATE ASSOCIATIONS.

Most of the State Associations are doing excellent work, and are increasing in favor among the Spiritualists in general. They are growing stronger in point of systematic work as well as in finances each year, as their reports will undoubtedly show.

There should be state organizations in all of the states. We think a good strong state association could be organized in Colorado if the Spiritualists there would take hold of the matter.

THE INDIANA STATE ASSOCIATION.

The Indiana State Spiritualists Association that we organized one year ago last February has proved to be a success. The executive board is thoroughly competent, full of zeal and entirely harmonious. Its work has been of a high character and has helped to give Spiritualism a standing throughout the state that could not have been established without it.

When Spiritualists show their love and respect for this cause by uniting to protect it, the outside world shows more respect for them.

The only obstacle in the way of a greater success of the Indiana State Association is the lack of funds. If these were furnished, its usefulness would be increased many fold. We are justly proud of the Indiana State Spiritualists Association. May the object lessons presented by the work of this and other state associations inspire the Spiritualists of all parts of the country to assist freely by giving their moral support and financial aid to the success of our movement.

LOCAL SOCIETIES' NEEDS.

Methods of work should be devised that would build up the local societies and make them strong. Each year we have recommended that a committee be appointed to arrange a course of reading, and instruction regarding methods of work for weak local societies.

Three years ago such a committee was appointed at the convention held in Boston. Two years ago, when we again brought the matter before the convention, held in Washington, it was learned that the committee had done nothing in the matter. The same committee was again appointed to carry out the wish of the convention and last year there was no report from that committee presented to the St. Louis convention.

We do not wish to continue this matter if the delegates do not care to consider it further, but in our humble opinion there is nothing as inexpensive that can do so much good for our cause as a systematic course of reading, properly arranged. We would, therefore recommend that this convention consider the question of appointing a committee to arrange a course of reading and instructions regarding methods of work for local societies.

Christian Scientists, Theosophists, Divine Scientists, New Thoughtists and others are making this a successful feature in their methods of work. Why should not the Spiritualists do the same?

In our opinion many books may be selected from those published in the interest of Spiritualism, and the local societies would gladly provide themselves with them if they knew what ones to get and were shown the best way to carry on the classes. Books on mediumship explaining the phenomena, laws governing them, conditions necessary to their production, etc., should constitute the first course. Other books teaching the beautiful philosophy of Spiritualism in its many branches might constitute other courses of instruction. If the books now published are not fully adapted to this work we believe that many new volumes upon these subjects would appear at once, the demand would create the supply, and our writers would furnish essays and lessons in abundance that would be adapted to this school of modern Spiritualistic thought, and it would grow and become one of the most useful educational departments of our movement.

It is apparent to your missionaries that there are great numbers of Spiritualists who not only need this education, but would be delighted to have the opportunity of studying this way. When this method of work is established it will be an encouragement to the formation of new societies, and a great aid to those we now have.

We would be pleased to have Hudson Tuttle appointed as chairman of that committee when the proper time arrives.

So much has been said about "Evil Spirits," The Harmfulness of Hypnotism," "The Great Psychological Crime," "Dangers of Mediumship," "Fraudulent Practices," etc., that many good and earnest people are all at sea upon the questions relative to mediumship, and through the above stated methods all could be set right and great good accomplished.

We trust this question may be dealt with by the convention and something practical accomplished, for everywhere we go we are being asked for something of this kind, and the demand should be supplied.

MEETING PLACES.

In many towns, halls and other places suitable for meetings are hard to procure, and rent is so high that it is burdensome to the local societies. In some towns it is impossible to get halls for spiritual meetings. In other places societies hire halls, taking exclusive control of them, sub-renting to fraternal orders and other societies, thereby getting their rent at a nominal price.

An excellent way where a society can do so, is to erect a building in a good location with a store or other place of business on the ground floor and a hall for meetings in the upper story. Such a building may often be rented to advantage and will pay for itself in time. The society can have control of it at all times and when the building is paid for it will be a source of revenue to aid in carrying on the meetings.

Several societies are carrying out this plan now.

BUILDING FUND.

We are in hopes that a building fund may be established where weak societies can procure funds, at a very low rate of interest, to assist in building churches or temples. It will be much cheaper for societies to pay a low rate of interest than to pay a large rent.

We believe that there are Spiritualists in the United States that would gladly furnish the funds to be used for this purpose, if the National Association would take the responsibility of handling them. It is one of the successful methods of other religions of our country and is worthy of the consideration of this convention.

THE OUTLOOK.

Spiritualists have good reason for being happy when they consider that there are nearly half a hundred camp-meetings being held in this country every year, several hundred local societies are holding public meetings two or three times per week, many Ladies' Auxiliary societies and Children's Lyceums are doing good work for the cause. Twenty state associations are doing active work and growing stronger each year, the great army of Spiritualists, who are in reality missionaries in private life. Thousands of good and true, worthy and well qualified mediums are doing public and private work; excellent speakers, splendid teachers and great writers in abundance; a good number of weekly and monthly Spiritualist newspapers and magazines wielding a mighty influence of helpfulness and upholding all the rest; and added to all of this is the soul-inspiring fact that the spirit world, to whom failure is unknown, with all of our beloved arisen friends, constitute the moving and directing power of this mighty movement called Modern Spiritualism.

We may earnestly proclaim with Jesus, "And upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matt xvi:16.

Who can be so weak and faint-hearted as to become pessimistic or discouraged? Modern Spiritualism has been a success from the start. It is growing rapidly to-day, and it will continue to succeed until it supplants error, falsehood, superstition and ignorance, and fills the world with knowledge, justice, love and the glory of its radiant light. "And the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets."—I. Cor. xiv:32.

IN CONCLUSION.

We wish to express our gratitude and appreciation to all who have so nobly assisted us in the arduous work of the year. The editors of the Spiritualist press have gladly aided us. Their assistance has been of great value to our work. They have published every article that we have furnished and we fully appreciate their kindness. We are also mindful of the glad welcome we have received on every hand, of the many homes that have been thrown open to us, of the words of cheer and encouragement so freely given, as well as the financial assistance rendered, and by no means least, the sweet words of loving sympathy given orally and sent by letter, as well as the good thoughts sent out to us in the time of our affliction with smallpox in Butte, Montana, for which we return our heartfelt thanks. May Heaven's blessings be richly bestowed upon all our friends. Respectfully submitted,

E. W. SPRAGUE AND WIFE,

CLAIRVOYANCE.

The light of truth about him shone,
And bright his features grew,
From the beyond he came to me,
I saw him and I knew—
The opening bud into the flower,
The charm of life and truth,
The evidence of endless life
And of immortal youth.

Material life had vanished, gone,
And spirit life was here;
Ethereal purity begun
In an advancing sphere;
Not earth with its surroundings now,
Its morning and its night,
My friend of former years was here
In robes of life and light.

Ah, brother, never more alone,
Darkness is vanished now,
We know as we are known, for truth
Illuminates the brow.
This clairvoyant ray doth shed
Its beauty o'er the earth,
And never more man need deny
Its Spiritualistic worth.

General Survey.

The Spiritualistic Field—Its Workers, Its Work, and General Progress, the World Over.

TAKE NOTICE.—We go to press for this issue a little earlier than usual, hence many items are unavoidably crowded out.

IN EXPLANATION.—The president of the N. S. A. only receives a regular salary when out on exclusive missionary work; at other times he is simply paid per diem for such actual days as he works for the Association.

Dr. Peebles is coming to Chicago to speak for the League, Saturday evening, Nov. 4, and he will speak for the Rising Sun Mission, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 5, and in the evening for the Aitken Society, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue.

W. H. Leidigh writes: "I cannot find words to give expression of my appreciation of your very able work for the cause of Spiritualism, and I often wonder who will fall into your place to keep up the good work that you so nobly began and have pushed along so ably."

Arzelia C. Clay writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "Mrs. John Lindsey is in the Hospital Department of the Ladies' Annex Building, Soldiers' Home, Grand Rapids, Mich. I found her very weak and ill. She sends regards to her many friends among the Spiritualists and would like to receive letters of cheer from them, though at the present time she is not able to reply. Give her your best thoughts."

Mrs. Carrie Francis, after attending the Minneapolis Convention, will make a flying trip to California, accompanied by Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, who has long been in the temperance work in connection with the W. C. T. U.

George W. Kates and wife held very interesting meetings at the Spiritualist church, on Boquet street, yesterday. At the morning service Mr. Kates spoke "Why Spirits Differ." He showed that differences exist amongst people on earth, and claimed that the spirit spheres are only evolved planes of life impinging this and hence are not habited by perfect beings, but only with the natural sequences of their talent or deficiencies. Spirits could not possibly all be and realize alike, no more than could mortals. Mrs. Kates gave a forcible address at the evening meeting upon spiritual law and the power of Spiritualism to help the human family. —Pittsburg Leader.

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "The Auxiliary of the First Association held the first meeting of the year at Mr. F. A. Woods', the president of the First Association. After the business meeting, Prof. and Mrs. Longley sang one of their beautiful songs. Mrs. E. Brooks favored us with a solo. About 9 o'clock Prof. Colville arived and gave about twenty personal poems. The local mediums on the calendar for the months are Mr. P. L. O. A. Keeler, Mrs. M. A. Price, Mrs. Ella Royal Williams. Progressive euchre every Tuesday evening at 402 A street S. A. The Educational Society of Spiritualists opened their meetings as usual in Smith's Hall. Mrs. M. T. Longley was the speaker for the evening. Her lectures are always inspiring, bringing one higher and to a fuller understanding of one's special gifts. Prof. Longley presided at the piano. Mr. Emil Nobbe holds meetings as usual in the Spanish Veterans' Hall. Mediums and workers are getting into line for winter work."

Helen Stuart-Richings makes the following correction: "My announcement in a recent issue of The Progressive Thinker, that I was engaged by the Minnesota State Association for missionary work in that state during October and November, was premature. Instead, I continue the work—begun in September—for the Psychical Research Society of Victoria, B. C., until the middle of November, when I start on the long overland journey eastward. For May and June, and camp dates, address until November 15, The Balmoral Hotel, Victoria, B. C."

Mrs. Abby Louise Pettengill, president of the City of Light Assembly, sailed for London on the Steamer Blucher, on October 5. She will make an extended trip through Europe and Egypt, and be absent for several months. The work of preparing the balance of the program for next season was left in the hands of Laura G. Fixen and Mrs. Annette J. Pettengill.

W. Hassman writes: "The North Star Spiritual Union held its regular Sunday service at 1546 Milwaukee avenue. The lecture was delivered by Rev. P. M. Esser, subject 'The Curse of Drink.' Mrs. Rennau and Rev. Esser gave tests. October 19, on Thursday, this society will hold a public benefit trumpet circle at Sister King's, 871 North Lincoln street, near North avenue, 8 p. m. sharp. All welcome."

C. J. Jameson writes: "I had the good fortune to be in the vicinity of Forty-seventh street and Grand Boulevard Sunday evening, Oct. 8, and was attracted by an announcement that a meeting would be held at 7:30 that evening in Grand Boulevard Hall. It stated that the meeting would be conducted under the auspices of the Independent Church of Truth. Having been a Spiritualist for over twenty years, and an investigator along independent lines, I decided to attend the meeting and was glad I did so. It proved to be the opening night in this city of that grand and fearless worker, Georgia Gladys Cooley, and it did me good to see the cordial and royal welcome extended to one who is an honor to our cause. It should be the duty of all Spiritualists to uphold and sustain our honest mediums. The struggle is hard, and the discouragements many, and they need our help. After they lose their powers, or old age overtakes them they are soon forgotten. Alas! the pity of it. We have just seen an example of this in the case of Mr. Slade. Noble-mindedness is soon forgotten. It is the solid weight that sinks to the bottom, while the light deeds float on top. The lecture was both entertaining and instructive. The tests and messages were splendid; all recognized; unusually clear and very convincing. This was no doubt helped by the good conditions, the music and singing being of a high order and the audience seemed to be in harmony with the speaker. The hall is conveniently located and I understand the meetings are to be continued through the winter. They should be well attended."

Mary E. French writes from Clyde, Ohio: "The First Spiritual Research Society of Clyde, Ohio, began its meetings Sunday evening, October 8, with Fred D. Dunakin as speaker. As president of the O. S. A. he is well adapted to go forth and teach true Spiritualism. A fluent and easy speaker, his words carry comfort, and stir one to higher endeavor in coming closer to the spiritual life of the universe. You are soon impressed with the fact, that his brain is either a store-house for sublime and profound thought, or the cells are played upon and respond to some master mind, as the strings of a harp bring forth delightful music by the touch of a musician's fingers. We are pleased to know that he does not ignore the minor phases of mediumship. He realizes it is the plank to stand upon when starting onward and upward in the realm of psychic investigation."

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "The services of the Rising Sun Mission on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 8, was attended by a large audience to listen to Dr. C. Tisdale of California. His guide, an ancient Greek, spoke on Bible Spiritualism and enlightened us to a great extent, as to the writers of the Bible, and how in ancient times the prophets were inspired to speak and prophesy. It was a rare treat for all who listened to him. Our sister, Mrs. Andrews, gave some beautiful demonstrations of spirit return. In the evening, Mr. H. M. French lectured on Nature and Spiritualism. His guides handled the subject to the satisfaction of the entire audience. A number of good thoughts were given out and some beautiful demonstrations from the arisen ones were also given to the audience by Brother French's guides, who gave messages from sealed questions. The singing of our choir, which is always of high order, was listened to with rapt attention. We cordially invite strangers and skeptics to attend our services on Sunday afternoons at 3, evenings at 8, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western avenue. Our speaker for Sunday, Oct. 22, will be Dr. J. MacFarland. All welcome. Our second annual Harvest Hop will take place Oct. 21, Saturday evening, at our hall, at which time Miss Raffles will be present. Come and find her among the crowd and get a prize."

Correspondent writes: "Mrs. O. B. Wilson has returned from a three weeks' visit at the home of Otto E. Kropp and sister, St. Peters, Minn. She enjoyed the much needed rest, and found her friends situated in a cozy, snug little home, and everything they could do for her pleasure was done, and she is here ready to take up her work again, feeling much better for the quiet rest. Otto is the same genial, pleasing young man that he was when with us here in Chicago, and we regret that we have lost a good young worker in the cause here in Chicago."

Dr. J. M. Peebles will probably spend the winter in San Diego, Cal.

Mrs. A. Sexsmith writes: "The meeting of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, Sunday, Oct. 8, both afternoon and evening, was very interesting. In the afternoon we were favored by a short talk by Brother Ring and Brother French, and messages by Sister Kusserow and Sister McIntyre. In the evening we were greeted by a large audience to listen to our brother, John W. Ring, of Galveston, Texas, who held the close attention of all for almost an hour; he chose his subject from the audience and handled it in a pleasing manner. Words are inadequate to express the interest we all felt in his address. May the angel world lead him on in his grand unfoldment, and may he live long on the earth plane to gladden the hearts of the people, for we feel that he is one among us who tries to live what he teaches. We are glad to report that Sister Hill was able to be with us and give messages to many, which seemed to bring satisfaction, as did also Sister Weaver. Remember these meetings are held each Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at O'Donnell College Building, Paulina street, between Washington Blvd. and Park avenue. Our speaker for Sunday, Oct. 15, will be Mrs. Eva Fravell of Austin. All welcome. Open door."

Will J. Erwood seems exceedingly busy in Kansas. Last Thursday, Oct. 8, he was at Spring Hill, Johnson county. He has lately visited Lawrence, Emporia, Wichita, and is booked for Kansas City, Kans., and Kansas City, Mo. He seems a great favorite wherever he lectures, and is wanted again and again. He is one of our most energetic workers, winning success by his faithfulness to principle, his intelligence, and fearless exposition of the truth as he regards it.

Maud K. Gates writes from Winfield, Kansas: "The Spiritualist Society of Occult Science has had the pleasure of having Max Hoffmann with us for one week. He held five meetings and each time the hall was filled and he seemed to hold his audience spellbound. The people were delighted with his work."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society enjoyed a fine talk by that old-time Spiritualist, Dr. J. H. Randall. He was followed by Mrs. J. Staner Adams with messages. On Oct. 8 we had a new feature, a lecture on 'Palmistry,' by Mrs. Margaret Forwerg. She is well posted, and demonstrated that it was a fact and not a fad, and cited that they were now introducing it into schools, and it is a help to all in a business as well as health, if fully understood. She was followed by a (new to the public) medium who gave some fine psychometric readings, which all acknowledged. I refer to Mrs. Ruth A. Coombs. We are to have her for a time, as she pleased so many. Mrs. O. B. Wilson, our financial secretary, returned a week ago from St. Peter, where she had been visiting Brother Otto Kropp."

Walter S. Miller writes from San Francisco, Cal.: "Since the return of Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie from the east, the People's church has again taken up the good work, and is doing fine. The society has changed its quarters and are now more centrally located at Red Men's Building, on Golden Gate avenue. We have a beautiful hall on the ground floor, and easy of access. The membership is increasing and everything points to a most successful season's work. Everyone is cordially invited to attend the services Sunday evenings, and will be made welcome."

With the exception of the New York Herald, whose editor refused with boorish rudeness to publish a reply to the infamous attack of Prof. Serviss, although presented by Judge Dailey and Dr. Wyman, I have met with courteous treatment from the secular press, in some instances my articles being given unusual prominence and display headlines.

In some respects the way has been more than usually difficult. There has been a constant demand for defense of some fraud—exposed, or medium thought to have been unjustly treated. I presume that I have been a disappointment to those who expected me to rush to the rescue, but I have not regarded such personal defense as a part of the Editor-at-Large's duties. It is deeply to be regretted that the faker and charlatan represent Spiritualism to the world far more than mediums, and it seems absolutely essential that some way be devised by which the true may be distinguished from the false.

With gratitude I acknowledge the assistance of a circle of interested friends of the cause.

One of the most helpful was George A. Bacon, who seemed never to forget, grow weary, or lose his interest. His influence, now, as an emancipated spirit, may become equally potent for good. He was noble, true, devoted, and spiritual in the conduct of his life. Such a perfect embodiment of the spiritual ideal, that words in his praise are weak and meaningless.

It will be noticed that there has been a large contribution to the spiritual press. After replying to opponents in secular journals, there came up matters which were only admissible in spiritual papers and of interest in greatest measure to an audience of Spiritualists. These subjects have been taken up under the general head of "Review of Passing Events." I have given this more and more attention because appreciative letters have encouraged me to do so.

While the secular press is free to the opponents of Spiritualism to publish their slanderous defamations, as shown on occasion of the death of Slade, there is a marked inclination to give more space to spiritual matters especially if placed under the name of Psychical Research." A few years ago it appeared that a "conspiracy of silence" had been organized, and from the press no one would learn that there was a Spiritualist or spiritual meeting in existence. Now meetings are reported, and it is common to find articles on the subject given prominent places.

When I think of what might be done, in comparison, what I have done seems scarcely worthy of mention. I have attempted to seize the most salient points of vantage.

For me has been to stand on the picket line and gather information from the hostile camps—to reply to sharpshooters and do what I humbly could to silence annoying batteries and meet guerilla attacks. Also to disseminate the principles of Spiritualism so the world may know what it is from its friends, and not be deceived by the false reports of its enemies.

I cannot close this report without giving credit for the assistance beyond all else, I have received from spirit intelligences.

While I have given my best attention to the duties assigned me, as I believe every one should, for such attention and concentration furnishes the best conditions for receptivity, I have at times felt that I was little more than a pen in their hands.

I am respectfully yours.

HUDSON TUTTLE,
Editor-at-Large, N. S. A.

THE LAND SOMEWHERE.

There's a home Somewhere, "just over there,"
We sing and dream of, fair as May,
Where the bloom is eternal, the landscape vernal,
And the mornings fresh with dewy spray;
Where comes from the sea, the hills and the sky,
Incense that lulls the senses to sleep,
No sad dreams awaken the dwellers to sigh,
Or cause them to sorrow and weep.
There's rest Somewhere in the bright to-morrow,
Where rivulets flow by mossy banks fair,
Where no heart grieves forsaken with sorrow,
Weary with toil or burdened with care;
Just over the hill-tops where the sunbeams play,
Comes the drowsy air pure and clear,
Where peace broods her wings the live-long day
And fills the heart with joy and cheer.
There's a land Somewhere in the gardens of light,
'Tis built of endeavor our high hopes fill,
We've felt it no pleasure through sorrows dark night,
In summer shine and winter's chill;
'Tis the land where our dreams are fashioned of love,
Spun from the sheen of the soul's ideal
In the glow of the twilight through the star aisles above,
Somewhere we know that Land is real.

National Lyceum Superintendent's Report.

The work of John W. Ring, as National Lyceum Superintendent, is so telling in its effect toward the advancement of this important branch of the great institution of Spiritualism, as to be marvelous. He deserves the esteem and praise of every Spiritualist in the land for his persistent effort in behalf of the children's department of Spiritualism. The National Lyceum is a success.

To the Thirteenth Annual Meeting of the National Spiritualist Association, at Minneapolis, Minn., October 17, 18, 19 20, 1905; Spiritual Era 58:—The year ending September 1, 1905, has been one of great interest in the lyceum work. The influence of a "school of liberal and harmonious education" has been pronounced and its benefits appear as never before. Willing hands are put willingly to the work and eager minds look for the tuition which inspires, cheers and comforts.

California has four active lyceums that affiliate with the National movement through the National Superintendent of Lyceum Work.

Mrs. E. G. L. Smith, conductor, Miss Nellie Sturr, 852 16th street, and Ralph Ulmer, treasurer, have a wide-awake lyceum in San Diego, with an average attendance of thirty-five.

In Los Angeles, Mrs. Mary C. Vlasek, 121 E. 30th street, and a corp of earnest workers, have an average attendance of thirty-five.

San Francisco is blessed with the presence and efforts of Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie, where a lyceum with Edith Norton, 945 Dolores street, secretary, has an average attendance of forty.

Summerland has a lyceum organized since the close of the Mineral Park camp-meeting (July 25). Mrs. L. H. Woodruff is the active leader and the average attendance is twenty-five.

Grand Junction, Col., has lately started a lyceum, with Mrs. Minnie Bennett, Rockway avenue, conductor, with an average attendance of twenty.

Washington, D. C., supports one lyceum. Mrs. Mary J. Stephens, 402 A street S. E., reports an average attendance of twenty.

Chicago, Ill., has but one lyceum that affiliates with the National Superintendent. Mrs. C. Schwahn, 523 Belmont avenue, reports an average attendance of twenty.

Indiana has three lyceums, all of which closed their sessions during the summer, as many were to attend the Chesterfield camp, where Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie had charge of the lyceum, and a grand work was done. These lyceums are located at Bryant, Peru and Elwood. Very good reports have been received during the year, and they promise to resume work. We put the average attendance at forty-five for the three lyceums.

Maine has the Bower of Beauty lyceum at Monson, where we have a beautiful exemplification of devotion to Truth. Mrs. Mary Drake Jenne started the Bower of Beauty lyceum with a few children in her home. Its influence has reached into the surrounding country until people drive as many as fourteen miles to attend this center of love and peace. The average attendance is twenty, sometimes many more. The spirit of strength emanates from this lyceum. Would that many pattern after this woman's devotion.

Massachusetts has four lyceums. Brockton is favored with a well organized lyceum where Mrs. Anna Shean, 29 Davids street, is active, with an average attendance of fifty. Their sessions are held regularly eight months of the year and they are prosperous.

Chas. B. Yeaton, 66 Franklin avenue, Revere, reports an average attendance of thirty-five at the Lynn lyceum.

John Howlett, 31 French street, Methuen, reports a live lyceum, with an average attendance of twenty-five.

Miss Ida F. Maxim, 257 Shawmut street, New Bedford, reports an average attendance of twenty. There are other lyceums in the state, we understand, and we hope for their co-operation and support.

Missouri has three lyceums with an average attendance of twenty-five each.

Joplin has the Sunshine lyceum, with Miss Dona Field, 1323 East Hill street, daughter of Mrs. Thomas Sheridan, as secretary.

St. Louis has two lyceums. One at the Temple, Pine street, with Mrs. B. J. Hall, 104 Channing street, conductor. The other is presided over by Mrs. Klara T. Hary, 1950 Wyoming street.

Chesaning Mich., has a lyceum, with an average attendance of fifteen. Miss Mabell Waldron reports a growing interest and we look with anticipation for this lyceum.

Minnesota has three lyceums, two in Minneapolis and one in St. Paul. G. W. Bush, 311 Pierce street N. S., and Miss Alice Wickstrom, 614 23rd avenue N. E., Minneapolis, report an average attendance of twenty-five at each lyceum.

Mrs. J. P. Whitwell, 254 East Winnifred street, St. Paul conducts a lyceum of more than fifty, which stands as an example for general conformity to the order and growth to the best possible ends.

New York has two lyceums. One in Buffalo, with an average attendance of twenty-five. At Syracuse, Rev. G. Mudge, 423 East Jefferson street, has charge of a lyceum with an average attendance of fifteen.

Ohio has four lyceums. At Conneaut, Miss Carrie Twing Howard, who had charge of the lyceum at the City of Light Assembly this year, has done signal service. Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss is there at present working with the lyceum, with an average attendance of thirty.

At Elyria, Miss Laura Winslow reports an average attendance of twenty for the Helping Hand lyceum, that has done much good work during the past year; at one time contributed five dollars to the National Lyceum Fund.

Irving Jackson manages to keep about fifteen in line at Sandusky.

Cleveland, the former home of the faithful arisen Thomas Lees, gives promise of work in the near future, for the lyceum.

Oregon has two lyceums. Mrs. Ella York, 453½ East Ankeny street, Portland, has furnished excellent reports during the past year with an average attendance of thirty.

M. Julia Evans a few months since started the work in Ashland, with fifteen.

Pennsylvania has three lyceums and there were two others at Bradford and Allegheny part of the season.

Titusville has a wide-awake crowd of workers, with more than thirty attending. C. W. Barber, 27 East Main street, is conductor and acting secretary. The society at Titusville owns a magnificent temple property, such as should be reared, in the name of humanity, in every city.

Philadelphia has a lyceum, with Mr. and Mrs. W. R. McGlenn, 1303 North 11th street, and twenty attending, that is doing a good work.

At McKeesport, Mrs. Ida Baumann, 2605 Walnut street, with twenty others report a good work and a promise of growth.

Texas can report but one active lyceum, that of the Home Lyceum in Galveston, where with an average attendance of forty-five we endeavor to do a good work, for the betterment of humanity. The Temple property at Galveston consists of two lots of ground, a large two-story brick structure, with lyceum room stage, etc., below, and lecture auditorium above, and a two story nine-room frame dwelling house.

Wheeling, W. Va., is represented with a lyceum by G. William Way, who instructs about thirty in the lyceum ideas.

Ripon, Wisconsin, has an active lyceum, with an average attendance of more than twenty-five, although many of them come several miles from the country. Arthur Mueller is secretary.

Milwaukee supports a lyceum in which Miss Louise Loebel, 189 Lloyd street, with about twenty-five, takes an active part.

Mrs. Mary C. Forbes has lately organized a lyceum with twenty-five in Etna, Washington.

Last year twenty-six lyceums were reported; this year you will note forty, with an average attendance of one thousand. We realize that there are other lyceums, and hope for their co-operation and support, to the end of establishing such systems as will make the work more effective. We realize this to be a small number of lyceums compared to the beauty of our Harmonial Philosophy of the territory covered, but with the marked increase over last year, we can but apprehend the possibility of gathering greater strength during the coming year.

At the beginning of the year we had $53.87 in the treasury. The National Spiritualist Association placed $100 in the lyceum fund. The National Superintendent by a lecture tour placed $35 in the lyceum fund. The single subscriptions have paid $69.40 while the several lyceums have paid in $325.28. All expenses have been paid and there remains $82.20. With an expenditure of $100 by the National Spiritualist Association $500 has been collected and expended. With this sum 12,200 eight-page and 16,950 four-page copies of The Progressive Lyceum have been printed and circulated, 1,375 letters have been written during the year, encouraging the work of the lyceum and in other ways attending to the business attendant to the office of National Superintendent of Lyceum work, as we understand it. Merit and Membership Cards and Badge Pins have been secured and furnished to the lyceums; and as rapidly as conditions permit, the many needs of the lyceum work are being met. There is such a necessity for system that the forces may be cemented, and by getting in touch with the various lyceum leaders we will gather such pointers as will make the growth of the lyceum a certainty.

Lyceum Day at various camps.—Los Angeles, Cal. and Lily Dale, N. Y. (where the National Superintendent attended); Chesterfield, Ind., where Mrs. Anna L. Gillespie had charge; Etna, Maine, where Mrs. Mary Drake Jenne worked with zeal; Mt. Pleasant Park, Clinton, Iowa, where Mrs. Mattie E. Hull had charge of the lyceum; at Lake Pleasant, Mass., where Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn and Mrs. Eleanor K. Eager, our faithful contributor worked with the lyceum, did much to unify the efforts of the several workers, in this truly important department of our beloved cause.

The heart of the founder of the lyceum work, Andrew Jackson Davis, is yet warm to the needs of the movement, and with many who have given of their best during the year, we join forces that Thomas Lees and Alonzo Danforth, arisen, may make us strong to move forward.

Mrs. Eleanor K. Eager of New London, Conn., has been an untiring worker to furnish stories and lesson matter for the Lesson Paper; Mrs. Elizabeth Schauss has furnished some very valuable matter. Several others have kindly contributed matter to be published. It is our aim to interest the leaders, conductors and members of the various lyceums, that they will furnish essays, responses, etc., thus affording suitable matter for the Lesson Paper, fresh from the fountain of action, at the same time cultivating their personal power of inspiration. It is the object of your Superintendent to furnish a regular topic, with suggestions, for each week thus drawing into harmonious expression the thoughts of the various lyceum workers and members, over the field. This unity of thought will produce unity of action and soon we will find the lyceum forces assuming such proportions as will demand an entire day at the National convention. Space is too limited to furnish more than helps, and the great need is leaders, who will faithfully draw into expression the soul powers of the pupils, keeping them in line with the topic suggested, thus retaining the harmony of thought and action. The Progressive Thinker, Sunflower, Light of Truth and Banner of Light have done much to this end by publishing the topics of the Progressive Lyceum in their columns. I am under lasting obligations to the Spiritualist press for their kindness in keeping the lyceum work before their readers.

Surely the conditions herein presented to you, will arouse a determination to place such funds in the lyceum treasury as will make the plans of the movement possible. When with an expenditure of $100 by the N. S. A., $500 can be collected and expended whereby 30,000 "tracts" are sent systematically throughout the land, and 1,000 of the "buds of promise" are nourished and fed, it is time to venture a little more.

Thus ends the third year of my ministrations for the lyceum work. The power of Go(o)d is moving through this cause of education, and the spirit friends are stooping low to carry forward the development of girls and boys until they shall become noble women and men, then we shall have spiritual Spiritualists who will knowingly seek for spiritualization rather than materialization, and endeavor to live as well as teach. All hail to the dawn of the day of peace, when love shall be expressed in the lives of children of earth and the path of progress be so clearly defined that the great multitude will walk therein.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

Who Are the Real Heroes? You Will Find Many in the Ranks of Spiritualism, But Study This Question Well as to What Constitutes a Hero—As Considered in the Chicago Evening Journal, by Angela Morgan.

"What is it to be great?" some one asks me. "In your opinion, what is really meant by the term greatness as applied to men and women?"

To be great is to live heroically the common life. The heroism of the uncommon is cheap by the side of the bravery that keeps men and women cheerful and aspiring in the midst of the terrors of every day.

For, with all its show of monotony and calm, and despite its stolid, prosaic front, it is this every day of ours that holds the real terrors, the genuine battles of life. It is "every day" that calls for the exhibition of our greatest strength, our sublimest courage.

It is in compelling ourselves to meet the common life that we suffer our severest pangs and make our bravest conquests. Just to keep going, just to be able to meet work and make the ordinary daily efforts means many times the summoning of all the will and faith we can command.

To live the life of every day and to live it bravely demands heroism of the highest order. Not to shirk, not to evade the clear call of duty, always to make sacrifices uncomplainingly, always to cover our soul's wound with a smile, to ignore our personal sorrow for the sake of the general cheer, forever to stick to our post, no matter what the temptation to desert—this is the every day heroism we are called upon to practice. This is the heroism that counts.

It is a heroism that involves the constant exercise of the will, the persistent use of faith and courage. It is a heroism that allows little respite from struggle and sacrifice and that forever restrains one from seeking escape through the gateway of death.

That is the chief command laid upon the common hero. He must not desert. And he will not desert. He sees that to put a bullet through his brain, to take a deadly dose or to let the waves cover him is the meanest cowardice. So he does the hard thing—keeps on living.

Dying! Does dying call for courage? Perhaps. But living demands courage a thousand times greater. To slip away quietly from the great tangle of things; to run away from the terror; to give up; this surely would be the simplest, easiest, softest way. But to keep on fighting, no matter what the temptation to desert; this, to me, is the spirit that approaches greatness.

To keep up ambition when there seems no cause for ambition; to infuse with life a dead present; to put magic into monotonous work; to meet pain unflinchingly; to keep sweet and full of faith no matter how cruel the buffetings of fate—these achievements demand greatness of soul and mind and spirit.

The other sort of deeds are comparatively easy of accomplishment. The times when they are demanded of us are rare indeed. We may encounter them once or twice in a life time, and when we do we are made aware of a sort of fatality, a predestination, that in itself is magical enough to furnish the needed courage.

In times of great stress and emergency mortals seem to find the elements of bravery close at hand. The stage of life seems set for a heroic deed, the theater is filled with an audience ready to applaud. The hero is conscious of being urged, sustained by a force not his own; he is aware of being carried out of himself by strange powers—divine agencies. The very strength of the situation supplies him with daring—makes his deed imperative.

But not so with our ordinary heroism. Here we are not conscious of the unusual and it is difficult to summon splendor to our aid.

Who are the real heroes? You see them about you every day. You meet them in cars, on the streets, in shops, factories, offices. They carry no medals by which you may recognize them. The world knows nothing of them. But could you look into the hearts, the souls, instead of merely gazing into the faces of these "ordinary mortals," you would find the greatness that awes and inspires.

We may theorize all we like, but unless we have learned to meet the common life we are not heroes.

The man of genius may be worshiped for his gifts. He may be called great; but if he does not know how to fight the plain, common battle of every day he is not a great man. He is a fine medium through which harmony, beauty, eloquence express themselves. But as an individual he lives this side of true greatness.

You may find a soul far more splendid in the woman who sews for you; the maid who serves you in the rest room; the tired saleswoman who patiently exhibits suits and coats for your inspection.

You may encounter greater nobility in the man who keeps the little stationery shop where you go daily to buy your newspaper. You may see the gleam of greatness in the eyes of the cheerful youngster who works days and studies nights, planning for the welfare of a mother and little sister.

Without question, the greatest thing in this world is character. And it takes character to live the common life and live it bravely.

LIFE BEYOND DEATH

Being a Review of

The World's Beliefs on the Subject, a Consideration of Present Conditions of Thought and Feeling,

Leading to the Question as o Whether It Can Be Demonstrated as a Fact.—To Which Is Added an Appendix Containing Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

BY MINOT J. SAVAGE, D. D.

8vo. Cloth, 342 Pages.

After a review of the beliefs held in the past concerning life beyond death, Dr. Savage takes up the present conditions of belief and considers the agnostic reaction from the extreme "otherworldliness" which it replaced, which was in turn followed by the Spiritualistic reaction against agnosticism. He points out the doubts concerning the doctrine of immortality held by the churches and the weakness of the traditional creeds and the loosening of their hold upon the people. He then considers the probabilities of a future life, probabilities which, as he admits, fall short of demonstration. The volume includes a consideration of the work of the Society for Psychical Research and also an appendix giving some of the author's own personal experiences in this line. Dr. Savage holds, as a provisional hypothesis, that continued existence is demonstrated, and that there have been at least some well authenticated communications from persons in the other life. The chief contents of the volume are as follows:

Primitive Ideas—Ethnic Beliefs—The Old Testament and Immortality—Paul's Doctrine of Death and the Other Life—Jesus and Immortality—The Other World and the Middle Ages—Protestant Belief Concerning Death and the Life Beyond—The Agnostic Reaction—The Spiritualistic Reaction—The World's Condition and Needs as to Belief in Immortality—Probabilities Which Fall Short of Demonstration—The Society for Psychical Research and the Immortal Life—Possible Conditions of Another Life—Some Hints as to Personal Experiences and Opinions.

In touching upon the various physical manifestations the author cites many absolutely authenticated instances, and chapters of his book are as weirdly fascinating as the most fantastic of Poe's tales. It treats on incredulity, credulity, hallucinations, psychic action of one mind upon another, transmission of thought, suggestion, the world of dreams, cerebral physiology, psychic dreams, distinct sight in dreams, actual facts, premonitory dreams and divination of the future, etc. 487 pages, cloth bound. Willis Miller and His Spirit Playmate.

We republish a brief abstract of the report previously given in reference to Willis Miller, a little boy of six, and his spirit playmate, Raymond. This week the paper will reach thousands who did not read that account. It is of unparalleled interest.

Spirit Return is world-wide, and its manifestations are kaleidoscopic in their characteristics. What more wonderful than the experience of a little innocent boy, as related in the Nashville Banner by Mrs. Reno. We reprint a brief abstract of her report:

Willis Miller, who plays with invisible companions, all the time, to the exclusion of living children, is the 6-year-old son of Capt. and Mrs. Wilson Bryant Miller of McKenzie, Tenn., and is beyond question the psychological marvel of the age.

His eyes are marvelous! They are blue—a blue which unites the tints of pansies, violets, bluetts, forget-me-nots and hyacinths, with the azure jewel glints of turquoises, sapphires and lapis-lazuli and the matchless hues of sea and sky. They are large and soulful, and as they gaze at one, a sudden flame blazes within their depths and instinctively one feels, one knows, that Something, a Presence sweet, silent but potential, has revealed itself for an instant of time.

In fact Willis Miller is one of the wonders of the 20th century, a veritable little angel on earth. An account of his experiences is as wonderful as the narrative of Aladdin and his lamp.

It frequently happened, after Willis learned to walk, that he would run forward with a glad cry of "Miss Green, Miss Green," and would nestle down, apparently on an invisible presence's shoulder or knee, where he would remain contentedly for hours. Miss Green was to him a substantial presence, though a spirit. When he was ill, no one could soothe nor quiet him as his mysterious Miss Green. As he grew older and his power to express simself in words developed with amazing rapidity, his parents were astounded to hear him prattling in his baby way of his great love for Miss Green and his intention of building a house for her, and marrying her.

"A baby prattling of marriage!" Then the parents asserted themselves and insisted that the child should cease talking such nonsence as love and marriage and assured Willis that Miss Green did not exist.

At first he was furiously indignant and then, he grew inconsolable. After a time of exhaustless grief he came to his parents and told them that Miss Green said that they were right. That he was too young to marry her, and that she was going away to remain till the time was ripe for their union. Then she would come back to him and claim him, but in going, she would not leave him lonely nor desolate; that she would bring him a companion, a little boy child like himself, whom he was to call "Raymond;" that Raymond would amuse and divert him, that he would always come, instantly, when Willis wished for him, even if the desire were not formulated into speech, and they would become devotedly attached to each other, united by a stronger, if stranger tie than that of blood.

"Raymond" is a veritable spirit, a spirit playmate in every sense of the word.

"Do you know, Willis, why Raymond, the spirit boy, will not manifest himself to me?"

"Certainly," the child replied. "It is because Raymond does not live in the real people's world. If he did, then you could see him as you see me. But he doesn't. He lives in the spirit people's world and the conditions are not right for you to see him now."

"You live in the real people's world, Willis, then why can you see him and I cannot?" I contended.

The child turned large, questioning eyes on me as he exclaimed: "I never thought of that before, but I will ask Raymond."

He was gone some time, and in his absence I asked his mother if she could, in any way, explain her child's strange life and beliefs.

She assured me she could not and that it was, and had even been, a mystery to herself and to her husband, and a source of anxiety and sorrow to them both. However attractive and interesting it rendered Willis to others, they wished with all their hearts that he was just like other boys.

"Prenatal influence is complex and far-reaching," I said to the mother of Willis. "Prior to the child's birth, do you recall any incident or experience which might have produced these conditions in his brain?"

"No," she said, thoughtfully; then positively, "no."

"Did you read much at that time?" I asked.

"Yes," she said, "I read a great deal."

"What?"

"The Bible—I studied it constantly and with deepest interest," Mrs. Miller replied.

"May I ask why?" I ventured.

"I had always been a consistent member of the Christian-Baptist church," she said, slowly, "but just about that time I became interested, through the conversion of a relative, in the Brethren, a new religious sect in Texas, who held that salvation lay in being born of the Spirit. Therefore I read the Bible and prayed constantly to be born again of the spirit. Could that have had such an effect on Willis, you think?"

"The psychologists must answer that," I said smiling, as just then Willis returned, and looking at me gravely he announced:

"Raymond thinks you probably understand why I can see him and you can not when he says the conditions or vibrations are just right for me and are not at all for you. But you will excuse, I hope, my long delay in returning, for Raymond and I became absorbed in a race, and I forgot to come back."

I looked at the child with vivid interest as I said: "What kind of a race do you mean?"

"A rabbit hurdle race. It was the most exciting race in the world. There is no sport to equal the hurdle leaping of those wonderfully trained rabbits of Raymond's."

Tell me, Willis," I said after a while, "how does Raymond look?"

"He is very much like me. He has blue eyes, pink cheeks, and golden hair, and he is just my height, but he is fatter than I am. And he wears much prettier clothes than I do. He has on now a Russian blouse of white linen."

At these words a new thought struck me, for Willis was dressed in a Russian blouse of white linen, banded with Yale blue. Could it be that this little child possessed the singular power of projecting his own astral body at will? If so, of course he used the law unconsciously, and therefore failed to recognize that the person he saw and called "Raymond" was his own, unknown self. This unknown self of each and all of us possesses all knowledge and with a child of Willis' imaginative type the whole story of Raymond might be easily explained. For the astral form is the exact reproduction of the physical body, even in the smallest detail of attire, and to test my theory, I said:

"Then you and he are dressed alike, for you also have on a white linen blouse."

"O, but mine is not at all like Raymond's for mine is trimmed with blue and his is all white, such soft, fine white."

As my theory was proved false by the child's words, I asked:

"Did Raymond ever live in the 'real people's' world?"

"Yes, over so long ago, and he has often told me about it. When he lived here his home was a large, white stone house. It was a real house, you know, and one day real lightning struck it and it was burned down. Wait a minute—that's so, Raymond, of course stone houses can't burn. Raymond says, the lightning, real lightning, struck it and tore out the doors and part of the walls."

I was busy with my notes, and I was startled by Willis, who was still on his father's knee and at some distance across the porch from me, saying, in his musical voice:

"Raymond is laughing at you, for he says you have written that wrong."

"What is wrong, Willis? I don't understand you," I replied.

"Raymond says look at your notes and you will see the mistake. He told you, through me, 'that real lightning struck the house in which he lived and it tore out the doors and part of the walls."

"Yes," I said.

"Well, Raymond says you have written windows instead of doors, and he is amused at the error."

I remembered perfectly that Willis had said doors and I had thoughtlessly scribbled windows instead, as a glance at my note-book proved. But how could the child have known that when he sat so far from me, and had not seen my notes at all? For they, positively, were in my hands all the time.

"Is Willis delicate? Is he often ill?"

"No," replied Mrs. Miller. "He looks more delicate than he really is, and yet, I am always most anxious about him. Not long ago he was taken ill with high fever from the very first. When the physician came he made me depress Willis' head below the level and keep it immersed in a bowl of water. Finally Willis said:

"How long are you going to keep this up, doctor? I can't stand it. Raymond says if you will let me lie comfortably in bed and put ice poultices on my head that it will be well in a few hours."

"The physician then ordered the ice poultices, which reduced the fever rapidly and the child was quite well in the afternoon," Mrs. Miller said with a smile.

A few moments later it was time for me to catch my train.

The station was not more than three city blocks away, and between it and the Miller homestead is a grove of magnificent forest trees. As Willis, who accompanied me, came near this bit of woods he suddenly threw back his head and gave forth a peculiar sound, half song, half whistle. Instantly the cry was answered in exactly the same tone by a chorus of birds in the trees.

I betrayed no surprise as I said to the child: "What did you do then, Willis?" for I had observed that the strange act was done carelessly and with no thought of effect.

"Do you mean when I got on the fence," he said.

"No, just after that."

"O, when I jumped up on the telegraph pole?"

"Just after that," I answered.

"O, then, you mean when I talked to the birds?"

"Yes. Will you talk to them again?" And once more the child gave vent to that strange musical call.

It was answered instantly by several hundred little feathered throats in the splendid oaks above us.

"Don't stop, Willis! Keep it up," I pleaded, for the strange chorus and the charming little leader fascinated me. And all the way past that grove of oaks the child continued to "talk to the birds."

"Does Willis talk to anything else except birds?" I asked Captain Miller.

"Yes," came the Captain's reply. "I don't understand it any more than any of the other strange things my child does, but he certainly can make all the animals and fowls at home answer his calls at any time, and Willis calls it 'talking.'"

After I had parted with the fascinating and strangely interesting child, I gave myself up to speculation about him. What is the mystery surrounding him? Can it be that he is a psychic of so fine a fibre that both his clairvoyant and clairaudient powers put him in instant touch with the astral form of some living child, between whom and Willis, exist not only a strong psychic affinity, but a great physical resemblance as well? Or, does it go deeper, is it more far-reaching, more strange, more mysterious still? Can little Willis Miller really stand for one of those wonderful metaphysical marvels which have occasionally startled the world?

These questions, wide and deep as they are, may never be answered satisfactorily. Nevertheless the remarkable child, Willis Miller, will challenge keen, close and subtle investigation of the psychologists of the age.

Having heard and read of several remarkable feats in photography recently where faces of invisible presences have appeared in the most inexplicable and mysterious manner on certain photographs, I desired to test if the case of Willis and Raymond held similar opportunity.

I wrote to Willis to this effect and his printed reply—he cannot write—is appended;

"DEAR MRS. RENO.
YOU. ASKED. ME. TO. SEE. IF. RAYMON. WOULD. LET. HIS. PICTURE. BE. MADE. IN. WITH MINE. HE. SAID. HE. WOULD.
"YOUR. LITTLE. FRIEND.
"WILLIS."

If the test should be verified—but as Kipling would say, that will be a story in itself.—Mrs. Reno, in the Nashville Banner.

A CALL FOR TEACHERS.

There is a large field for healers and teachers in small towns. After a little study of "Healing Currents from the Battery of Life" (by Walter DeVoe), students start groups for study and realization of the healing power.

So helpful is this book that as many as 21 copies have been sold to a group formed to hear it read. Manifestations of healing are common where students unite to study and practice the instructions given in this wonderful book. Many are willing to pay for instruction in healing truth, but there is need of energetic persons to get them together.

Those who can successfully form groups in their own town among their friends will find enjoyable and profitable work doing the same in other towns.

Order a copy now and spread the glad tidings. Price $2. Special terms to those who can sell a number of copies through personal effort or letters.

PASSED TO SPIRIT LIFE.

[Obituaries to the extent of ten lines only will be inserted free. All in excess of ten lines will be charged at the rate of fifteen cents per line. About seven words constitute one line.]

Passed to spirit life, Oct. 3, 1905, Anton F. Wittig, at his home in Van Dyne, Wis., at the age of 65 years. The deceased was a member of the Light of Truth Spiritual Society, at Ripon, Wis. He was a great sufferer for many years and not able to attend regular meetings, but the good friends would from time to time hold socials and meetings at the Wittig home where the sufferer also could enjoy hearing from those he loved and had gone before him. Spiritualism was a comfort to him and one of his last wishes was, that Mrs. Anna Mehrtens should officiate at the burial of his body and Miss L. G. Loebel to sing some of his favorite songs.

His wishes were granted, and Mrs. Mehrtens delivered a beautiful sermon, taking for her subject, "In my father's house are many mansions."

LOUISE G. LOEBEL.

Passed to the higher life, Sept. 25, from his home, Worth, Ill., Christian Flohr, aged 61 years. He leaves a wife and four children to join him again. He loved flowers and the most that were placed on his coffin and grave, were beautiful roses, and many other kinds that he raised. He did not believe he would live after this change, but hoped to. Services at the grave by Mrs. M. A. Burland. COR.

Elmer Kleckner, for years a sufferer of consumption, passed to the higher life, at his home in Battle Creek, Mich. His wife and daughter Helen survive him. They have traveled extensively in hopes of his full restoration of health, but of no avail. He was a thorough believer in Spiritualism. Mr. Kleckner was a member of the Just Enough Club, who paid loving respects, and gave beautiful floral tributes. He was resigned and looked not upon death as the last sleep, but as the last awakening. The services were conducted by Mrs. Marian Carpenter of Detroit, who officiated in her usual impressive manner, giving words of sympathy to the relatives, and many loving friends.

Emma May Matteson passed to spirit life, at Nimshew, Cal. She was only 27 years of age; a lovely character and devoted wife. Her husband accompanied her remains to Rochester, Mich., where the funeral was conducted in the Unitarian church by Mrs. Marian Carpenter of Detroit, the well known lecturer, who always imparts words of sympathy and comfort for those left to mourn, telling them of the life immortal.

Captain Davis, aged 86 years, a retired lake captain, highly respected and honored by his many friends, passed to spirit life at Detroit. His wife preceded him to their spirit home ten years ago. While he never forgot his duty or lost interest in life, it was his earnest wish to join his beloved wife. The summons was received joyfully by him. Mrs. Marian Carpenter, of Detroit, who officiated at his late wife's obsequies, delivered the funeral address.

To Our Old Patients and Friends.
I know not if you are all living in the real life (Spirit) or not, or if you are still in the physical suffering with the cares and sickness pertaining to this life.

First, let me say that I too, have been very ill for over two years. I would get better, then another blow would come, of sorrow—sickness and sorrow, sorrow and sickness; in fact, I have been down in the dark valleys, and have suffered as few have suffered; but through it all I have felt that night would not last always, and that some time the dawn of the morning would come, and to-day I find that I am full of confidence in the love of the Father and Mother God and for all of their children, and I find that once again am I strong in the Spirit and that the dawn is coming. I have had new strength given me, and I have taken up my Medical and Spiritual work again. I know, dear friends that as I once more resume my work, I have your best wishes.

Now I will inform you of our LATEST AND GRANDEST TRUTH that has come to us. It is a new method by which we make medicines out of the green roots and herbs, gathered out of God's great garden of Nature, at just the right season of the year. It is by a process which gets rid of the EVIL EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL, which all other liquid medicines contain. Alcohol destroys the very medicinal properties in the root and herb that cures. By our method we preserve these properties. No one knows this method but ourselves. We wish you to believe us when we say that we are meeting with the most wonderful success since we began this new method. We prepare the medicine for each case, out of the fresh green root and herb. The process at present in making this medicine costs us much more money than if we used the ordinary fluid extracts and tinctures; and it takes us twice, yes, three times as long to make the medicine, but the results are just grand. Now in order to introduce this new method of curing the sick, we are offering to our old patients and friends, who may be ill, a trial treatment for only Five Dollars a month, and with this condition only, that at the end of two months' treatment they will allow us to publish the results. We are curing old chronic cases in two months' time that used to take us six months to cure, the same kind of disease; curing cases in three months' time which used to take us a year.

Now, kind friend, do you not know of some poor sick one, that, by informing them of our new method, you may be the means of restoring to health and happiness? If you do, or not, we wish to hear from you again. While this is a printed letter, still it is a personal one to you all. But I desire to tell you, my friends, of this wonderful discovery, and cannot write each one a letter. Kindly let us hear from you, giving your present address; and it ill, leading symptoms and your present weight.

Yours kindly,
DR. C. E. WATKINS.

HOW HE WAS MISLED

At One of the Materializing Seances of Mabel Aber Jackman.

The following constitutes an example which may well become a PSYCHOLOGICAL STUDY, Mabel Aber Jackman for many years was a notorious figure in the ranks of Spiritualism. The spirits that "materialized" in her presence at Lily Dale were human beings, evolved after the usual manner on the earth plane, as evidenced by one of the flash light pictures obtained at one of her seances. In other words the "spirits" were "mortals," and Mabel was not wanted at the camp, and never went there again.

Finally one of the "spirits" that appeared at her rooms on the South Side was grabbed, and proved to be a confederate. A full account of this exposure was published in The Progressive Thinker and for which the paper is entitled to the gratitude of every Spiritualist. Since then Mrs. Jackman has lost caste with Spiritualists, and is now carrying on her schemes outside the ranks of Spiritualism.

It is certainly a PSYCHOLOGICAL STUDY how the venerable Dr. Cole, a fine physician, a man of culture and refinement, could have been so influenced and misled at her "materializing" circles as to freely part with him money to promote a questionable undertaking.

Mrs. Jackman is now posing as the "SHEPHERDESS OF PARADISE," representing the "Church of Scientific Christianity." Every Spiritualist should be exceedingly thankful she has forsaken our ranks forever. The good work accomplished by The Progressive Thinker in exposing her methods has been of great value to our Cause. Read carefully the following:

CURIOUS PSYCHOLOGICAL STUDY

In Which a Prominent Medium Played an Important Part.

"Crystal gazing" proved a costly pastime for Dr. Alfred L. Cole, a wealthy retired physician, living with his family at the Auditorium Annex, as set forth in the Chicago Record-Herald. Roughly estimated, the sum of money extricated from the bank account of the doctor, after he had gazed into the crystal sphere for ten or fifteen minutes, taking deep breaths in the meantime, is about $7,500. He may have lost more, but he is willing to forget that. Now he wants to recover $2,800 of the total amount lost, and he has sued "Rev" Mabel Jackman, 3663 Indiana avenue, for that sum. The writ was placed in the hands of the sheriff yesterday for service, but Mrs. Jackman had not been found last evening.

As for the $4,700 for which the doctor mourns, he has no hope of recovering it. He would just as soon forget about it, if he could. He retains a lot of mementos, however, which refresh his mind as to how he lost the money through his implicit faith in the spirit message given him by the "Rev." Mrs. Mabel while he sat in her "developing circles" at 825 North Clark street more than a year ago. It was there that Dr. Cole, a believer in Spiritualism, came under the influence of Mrs. Jackman, and became entangled in the schemes of a number of cunning men, whom he declares to have been her confederates.

Dr. Cole has sued Mrs. Jackman, whose prominence as a medium, teacher of the occult sciences and founder of a cult of her own which has brought her into contact with the courts heretofore, for $2,800. This sum is represented by fifty-six notes, each for $50, executed by herself and her sister, Mrs. Della Simmons, after Mrs. Jackman had been arrested and threatened with punishment on charge of being party to a conspiracy to swindle. The notes were given with the understanding that prosecution would be abandoned. But since Dr. Cole has been unable to collect his money he has placed the notes in the hands of Arthur Burr Pease of the law firm of Pierson, Pease & De Young, with instructions to collect, if possible.

The ease with which Dr. Cole was separated from his money offers a chance for study to psychologists. The doctor formerly practiced in Minneapolis, and there laid the foundation for his large fortune. Later he had an office at 163 State street, where he garnered many more dollars in the course of a few years. When he retired he had learned how to make money, but it was Mrs. Jackman and her friends, if he is to be believed, who showed him how to lose it.

One January night over three years ago Dr. Cole, who is over 60 years old, and an ardent student of psychic phenomena, received an invitation to attend a "developing circle" at her residence, 825 North Clark street. An explanation for the invitation might be found in his confession that he previously had told her that he had just sold a piece of property for $20,000.

The doctor's visit to the "developing circle" was attended by many developments. Mrs. Jackman, solicitous that he should obtain results, gave him a seat beside a man named Stillson, and placed a crystal sphere in his hands, instructing him to gaze upon it intently, concentrate his mind and take deep breaths, all of which Dr. Cole did in strict obedience. The lights were turned down low, and Mrs. Jackman began making passes over the heads of those present. She also began to announce messages, some through her spirit guides, some through trumpets, and some by independent voices.

"A Spirit from New York is in the room," said Mrs. Jackman, "and it has come to speak with Mr. Stillson. There is a very sick gentleman in New York, who is interested in some way with Mr. Stillson in a business venture."

"Why, that's so," replied Mr. Stillson from the chair next to Dr. Cole's, "I got a message from him this afternoon saying he was very sick, and that there was a very important business arrangement pending, amounting to $50,000 or more. The message said he was very anxious about the matter, as delay might prevent us making the money. Will the man recover?"

"That is doubtful, the spirit says," answered Mrs. Jackman. "He is so sick that they are to take him to Florida. The spirit tells me that Mr. Cole can help him out in this matter."

Some kind of a spirit, good or evil, then came to Dr. Cole, and told him he could be of great assistance to Mr. Stillson, and that they should remain after the circle had adjourned and talk the matter over with Mrs. Jackman. The conference brought out the fact that Stillson claimed to be a telegraph operator, with a partner named Race; that they were acquainted with a Western Union lineman named Dan, and that Dan would join them in a scheme for tapping the telegraph wires by which they would obtain advance information on racing and stock quotations, and make a lot of money.

Mrs. Jackman convinced him that he could be of great assistance to Stillson by going into the scheme. Her argument proved to be correct, in the light of later developments, for Dr. Cole became a victim of the old-time game, the antiquated wire-tapping scheme.

Dr. Cole had it explained to him the next day in his office by Stillson and Race that they did not have enough money to buy certain electrical instruments necessary to conduct operations. They already had about $2,000 worth of instruments. They knew, however, where some second-hand instruments, just as good as new, could be purchased. They had a bill for this machinery already made out, and agreed that if Dr. Cole would buy the apparatus they would give him all the profits each day until it had been paid for before they would ask for a cent of money.

Dr. Cole drew his check for nearly $900, and the next day, after cashing the check, paid the money over to a young man in an office in the Commerce building, at the door of which was the name of O. M. Stone. Thus Dr. Cole gave $900 for machinery which he never had seen, to a man whom he never had met before, upon the suggestion of men who had no place of business, one of whom had been introduced to him by Mrs. Jackman.

The next scene of operations was Milwaukee, where Dr. Cole went in the company of Stillson, leaving Race behind to send the signal over the telegraph wire that should net them a big sum of money. But the signal never came. Instead Dr. Cole got a telephone message from Race stating that more machinery was required and that it would cost about 900 more. Obediently Dr. Cole came back to Chicago and drew $900 more from the bank, paying it to Stone and carefully taking a receipt for the amount.

From Millwaukee the scene shifted to St. Louis, because, as Stillson and Race explained, they could not get the signal from Chicago. But they found that the signal was known to three men in St. Louis, each of whom demanded $250 for imparting it. So Dr. Cole paid out $750 more. He added $55 to this sum the next day to pay Stillson's traveling expenses to Milwaukee, where he was to make a deal in stocks. Two days later Stillson returned and inspired confidence in the doctor by handing him $75 which he said he had made in a stock deal, and then turning in an expense account for $37.

This showing of profit paved the way for a coup on the good doctor. Stillson and Race pointed out to him that a horse race was soon to come off at Oakland, Cal., and that if they went in strong they would clean up a fortune. About this time Mrs. Jackman re-appeared on the scene. Dr. Cole began to be suspicious when asked to put in $2,000 on a bet. Mrs. Jackman, he says, called at his office, explaining that she had done so because the spirits told her to do so. That was the only way she could account for her visit.

The advice Dr. Cole got from Mrs. Jackman was reassuring. All he had to do was to bet all his money, for the spirits said he could not possibly lose, which was what Race had said before. Mrs. Jackman was so confident that she betrayed much anxiety to have her husband participate in the wager, but when Dr. Cole gave this information to Race, that gentleman refused to let anybody else in on the "good thing."

With all of these forces working upon him Dr. Cole could not resist. He drew $2,000 more from the bank, and giving half of it to Race, they went to a poolroom in Thirteenth street, near Indiana avenue, where Race presented what he said was a letter of introduction to the manager. Dr. Cole saw money being wagered by other men and bets being paid off. He was gratified deeply when Race came and whispered:

"I've got the tip on the right horse, and the money is ours; put your bet on the same horse I do," he said, and then went up to a man, giving the name of a horse. Dr. Cole was game enough to hand the man his $1,000. A ticker began sounding and the man announced that the winner was the horse that Dr. Cole had bet on. A few moments later, while Dr. Cole's fingers were itching to get hold of his winnings, he was told by Race that a mistake had been made. The fog was so thick at the Oakland track that the telegraph operator mistook the jockey's colors, and that another horse had won.

Dr. Cole had lost over $4,500 within a month, but he was not quite ready to quit the game. He was told by Race that Stillson was almost prostrate over the loss, and that such an accident could not happen again in a thousand years. Mrs. Jackman told him he should not mind the loss, and that the spirits told her he would get all of it back again, and more too. A few days later Race showed him a telegram from St. Louis stating that the building in which they had stored their telegraph apparatus had burned.

"If we could only get some more machinery," cried Race, frantically, "we could go East and do business. Dan has a friend in New York who holds the same kind of a position Dan held here in Chicago, and Dan can fix it up with him so we can do all kinds of business." Mrs. Jackman gave more assurance and Dr. Cole began paying out money again. He gave Stillson $75 to go to New York. Next he paid out $1,905 for machinery and $55 for more cable. More machinery required the expenditure of an additional $750. Dr. Cole was then informed that the telegraph company had discovered their scheme, and that they would have to get out of New York. Race knew of a place up the Hudson River where they could rent a cottage and tap the wires from there. This cost about $1,500 more, and still the doctor was not ready to lay down. The Western Union Telegraph Company, he was told, had arrested two of their confederates and confiscated all the machinery.

Race insisted that the doctor, in the interest of their safety, should destroy all accounts he had with them, and he acted on the suggestion. He also obeyed their request and come back to Chicago. He saw Mrs. Jackman here and continued to ask her advice until he finally concluded that he had been swindled.

WAS ABRAHAM LINCOLN A SPIRITUALIST?

A Chapter of Interesting White House Incidents

And Incontrovertible Statements That Show Spiritualism's Outreach and Worth.

Upon the above question the people, outside of Spiritualism, and especially in the Catholic Church, are very positive in their denial that Spiritualism has any claims to the honor of being accepted in principle by the Martyred President, but in this bit of true history it is shown that Abraham Lincoln was not only a believer in spirit return, but that he had seances in the White House, and received advice and many prophetic communications from the spirit world that influenced his action in that great crisis, the War of the Rebellion. Catholicism may wish to cover its trail through that bloody conflict, but the ashes of the murdered President still cry out against it, and will so long as history lasts. We take this opportunity for presenting Chapters from the book "Was Abraham Lincoln a Spiritualist?" by the Medium herself, Mrs. Nettie Colburn Maynard, who presided at the seances. This recital of a historical fact will be interesting to all.

FIRST MEETING WITH LINCOLN.

Secretary Foster takes us to Mr. Laurie's house in Mrs. Lincoln's carriage—Mrs. Lincoln promises to obtain another furlough for my brother—I go into a trance—"This young lady must not leave Washington; Mr. Lincoln must hear her."—Am promised a place under Mr. Newton—Am promised a furlough—A thirty-day furlough is granted—A present of a hundred dollars—I arrange to stay in Washington—We are invited to the White House, where we hold a seance that is of historical importance—"So this is our little Nettie"—President Lincoln is advised upon the Emancipation Proclamation, that it is to be the crowning effort of his administration and his life—The President states that pressure was being brought to bear upon him to suppress the enforcement of the proclamation—"My child, you possess a wonderful gift, but that it is of God I have no doubt."

About half past eight o'clock in the evening of this day I was lying exhausted on the sofa, when a carriage halted at the door. Mr. Laurie entered hurriedly, asking if the "children" had gone (Parnie and myself). Mr. Foster explained that we were still there, and the reason therefor. Mr. Laurie seemed delighted that we had been delayed; and came at once to my side, and kindly said, "Get ready at once and go to my house with me, and I think we can remedy the loss of this furlough."

It was a ray of light in dense darkness. Without saying a word, I hastily prepared myself and was surprised to find a most elegant carriage at the door to receive us. Its crimson satin cushions should have told me whose carriage it was; but my mind was so fraught with my trouble that I barely noticed the fact that a footman in plain livery opened the door for us, and we were soon on our way to Georgetown. On my arrival I was astonished to be presented first to Mrs. Lincoln, the wife of President Lincoln, then to Mr. Newton, Secretary of the Interior Department, and the Rev. John Pierpont, at that time one of the chief clerks in the Treasury building. Mrs. Lincoln informed me that she had heard of the wonderful powers of Mrs. Miller, Mr. Laurie's daughter, and had called to witness the physical manifestations through her mediumship. He had expressed a desire to see a trance medium, when they had told her of myself, fearing that I was already on my way to Baltimore with my brother, as I expected to leave that evening. She had said at once, "Perhaps they have not gone; suppose you take the carriage and ascertain." Mr. Laurie went, and found me, as I have stated, prostrated from my long anxiety and trouble. But for the loss of that furlough this meeting would not have taken place. Mrs. Lincoln noticed my swollen eyes and inflamed cheeks, and inquired kindly the cause. Mr. Laurie briefly explained. She quickly reassured me, saying, "Don't worry any more about it. Your brother shall have another furlough, if Mr. Lincoln has to give it himself." Feeling once more happy and strong, I was in a condition to quiet my nerves long enough to enable my spirit friends to control me. Some new and powerful influence obtained possession of my organism and addressed Mrs. Lincoln, it seemed, with great clearness and force, upon matters of State. For one hour I was under this control. When I awoke there was a most earnest and excited group around me discussing what had been said; and Mrs. Lincoln exclaimed, with great earnestness, "This young lady must not leave Washington. I feel she must stay here, and Mr. Lincoln must hear what we have heard. It is all-important, and he must hear it." This seemed to be the general impression. Turning to me she said, "Don't think of leaving Washington, I beg of you. Can you not remain with us?" I briefly explained that my livelihood depended on my efforts as a speaker, and that there was no opening in Washington of that kind for me. But, said she, "There are other things you can do. Surely young ladies get excellent pay in the different departments, and you can have a position in one of them, I am sure." Turning to Mr. Newton, who sat at her right, she said, "You employ ladies, do you not, Mr. Newton? and you can give this young lady a place in your department?" He bowed, all smiles, saying, "I have only very old ladies and young children in my department; but I can give this young lady a position if it pleases you." She turned to me then in her sprightly manner, as if the whole thing was settled, and exclaimed, "You will stay then; will you not?" I said I would consult my friends, and see what was best. But she said, "You surely will not go until Mr. Lincoln has had a chance to see you?" I replied I would not, if he desired to see me. She then turned to Mrs. Laurie, and said, "Now, to-morrow, you go with this young lady to Mr. Tucker; tell him you go by my direction, and just how the case stands. Tell him he must arrange it to have her brother secure another furlough." Soon after, she left, and Mr. Somes kindly escorted me back to Mr. Foster's.

The next morning Mrs. Laurie came for me, and we went to the office of the Assistant-Secretary of War. I hid as closely as possible behind the stately person of Mrs. Laurie; but my old friend saw me and came forward to inquire how I was and if all was well with my brother. I could only shake my head and sink into a chair, leaving Mrs. Laurie to explain matters. He listened patiently, and came to me and said in the kindest manner: "You seem to have been delayed for some important purpose, my young friend, so I would not be overtroubled about it. You get any commissioned or United States surgeon to examine your brother again, and if he affirms he is still unfit for service in the field or camp, I will issue a new furlough, if you bring me the paper."

With a light heart I could only thank him; and that afternoon my brother and myself went to Mr. Laurie's, and in a few hours a United States surgeon from the Georgetown Hospital made a requisite examination and recommended him a furlough. The next morning I carried it to Mr. Tucker, and a furlough was re-issued by the War Department—this time for thirty days' leave of absence. With a light heart I went to my brother with the paper; and that night Mr. Laurie, on his return from the Postoffice Department, placed in my hand an envelope, which, I was surprised to find, contained one hundred dollars in greenbacks, and a slip of paper on which was written, "From a few friends who appreciate a sister's devotion." No name anywhere to tell who were the generous donors; and I know not to this day whence came this most welcome tribute.

The friends I had made in Washington were determined I should not leave that city, and it was decided that my brother should take my mother back to Hartford with him, with all her household effects; that I should resign my position in Albany; and that my friend Miss Hannum should join me in Washington. This programme was carried out.

The day following my brother's departure for home, a note was received by Mrs. Laurie, asking her to come to the White House in the evening with her family, and to bring Miss Nettie with her. I felt all the natural trepidation of a young girl about to enter the presence of the highest magistrate in our land; being fully impressed with the dignity of his office, and feeling that I was about to meet some superior being; and it was with trembling that I entered with my friends the Red Parlor of the White House, at eight o'clock that evening (December, 1862).

Mrs. Lincoln received us graciously, and introduced us to a gentleman and lady present whose names I have forgotten. Mr. Lincoln was not then present. While all were conversing pleasantly on general subjects, Mrs. Miller (Mr. Laurie's daughter) seated herself, under control, at the double grand piano at one side of the room, seemingly awaiting some one. Mrs. Lincoln was talking with us in a pleasant strain when suddenly Mrs. Miller's hands fell upon the keys with a force that betokened a master hand, and the strains of a grand march filled the room. As the measured notes rose and fell we became silent. The heavy end of the piano began rising and falling in perfect time to the music. All at once it ceased, and Mr. Lincoln stood upon the threshold of the room. (He afterwards informed us that the first notes of the music fell upon his ears as he reached the head of the grand staircase to descend, and that he kept step to the music until he reached the doorway).

Mr. and Mrs. Laurie and Mrs. Miller were duly presented. Then I was led forward and presented. He stood before me, tall and kindly, with a smile on his face. Dropping his hand upon my head, he said, in a humorous tone, "So this is our 'little Nettie,' is it, that we have heard so much about?" I could only smile and say, "Yes, sir," like any school-girl; when he kindly led me to an ottoman. Sitting down in a chair, the ottoman at his feet, he began asking me questions in a kindly way about my mediumship; and I think he must have thought me stupid, as my answers were little beyond a "Yes" and "No." His manner, however, was genial and kind, and it was then suggested we form in a circle. He said, "Well, how do you do it?" looking at me. Mr. Laurie came to the rescue, and said we had been accustomed to sit in a circle and to join hands; but he did not think it would be necessary in this instance. While he was yet speaking, I lost all consciousness of my surroundings and passed under control.

For more than an hour I was made to talk to him, and I learned from my friends afterward that it was upon matters that he seemed fully to understand, while they comprehended very little until that portion was reached that related to the forthcoming Emancipation Proclamation. He was charged with the utmost solemnity and force of manner not to abate the terms of its issue, and not to delay its enforcement as a law beyond the opening of the year; and he was assured that it was to be the crowning event of his administration and his life; and that while he was being counseled by strong parties to defer the enforcement of it, hoping to supplant it by other measures and to delay action, he must in no wise heed such counsel, but stand firm to his convictions and fearlessly perform the work and fulfill the mission for which he had been raised by an overruling Providence. Those present declared that they lost sight of the timid girl in the majesty of the utterance, the strength and force of the language, and the importance of that which was conveyed, and seemed to realize that some strong masculine spirit force was giving speech to almost divine commands.

I shall never forget the scene around me when I regained consciousness. I was standing in front of Mr. Lincoln, and he was sitting back in his chair, with his arms folded upon his breast, looking intently at me. I stepped back, naturally confused at the situation—not remembering at once where I was; and glancing around the group, where perfect silence reigned. It took me a moment to remember my whereabouts.

A gentleman present then said in a low tone, "Mr. President, did you notice anything peculiar in the method of address?" Mr. Lincoln raised himself, as if shaking off his spell. He glanced quickly at the full-length portrait of Daniel Webster, that hung above the piano, and replied, "Yes, and it is very singular, very!" with a marked emphasis.

Mr. Somes said: "Mr. President, would it be improper for me to inquire whether there has been any pressure brought to bear upon you to defer the enforcement of the Proclamation?" To which the President replied: "Under these circumstances that question is perfectly proper, as we are all friends [smiling upon the company]. It is taking all my nerve and strength to withstand such a pressure." At this point the gentlemen drew around him, and spoke together in low tones, Mr. Lincoln saying least of all. At last he turned to me, and laying his hand upon my head, uttered these words in a manner that I shall never forget: "MY CHILD, YOU POSSESS A VERY SINGULAR GIFT; BUT THAT IT IS OF GOD, I HAVE NO DOUBT. I THANK YOU FOR COMING HERE TO-NIGHT. IT IS MORE IMPORTANT THAN PERHAPS ANYONE PRESENT CAN UNDERSTAND. I must leave you all now; but I hope to see you again." He shook me kindly by the hand, bowed to the rest of the company, and was gone. We remained an hour longer, talking with Mrs. Lincoln and her friends, and then returned to Georgetown. Such was my first interview with Abraham Lincoln, and the memory of it is as clear and vivid as the evening on which it occurred.

[* * * I looked up, and did not need to know by any one telling me who he was. Lincoln stood at the open window.

He was looking down, yet seeing nothing. His eyes were turned inward. He was thinking of the great work and duty that lay upon his soul. I think I never saw so sad a face in my life, and I have looked into many a mourner's face. I have been among bereaved families, orphan children, widows and strong men whose hearts have been broken by the taking away of their own; but I never saw the depth of sorrow that seemed to rest upon that gaunt, but expressive countenance. Yet there was a light in those deep-sunk eyes that showed the man who was before me as perhaps the best Christian the world ever saw, for he bore the world upon his heart. That man was bearing the country of his birth and love upon his naked soul. It was just one look; but I never have forgotten it, and through the dimness of all these years that great and patient man looks down upon me to teach me how to bear, and how to do, how to hope, and how to give myself for my fellow-men.

Lincoln was a noble representative of free institutions. He stood as the representative of that liberty which had been won by the swords of the Revolution, which had been organized by the earlier settlers of the Republic, and which has been adorned by many years of growth until the present day. The Revolution had passed before Lincoln's day; but he was a typical representative of the freedom of heart, and soul, and life which ought to be the most priceless inheritance of every American citizen. I think this was evinced in his whole course and conduct. He was surrounded by able men.

The sword and the pen both had their heroes; but before this man every one chose to pause, and his choice was always the wisest of all. I do not know what Lincoln would have done without support; but through all troubles, the individuality of that one man, his unflinching courage, his broad sympathy and charity, his homely common sense, his indomitable rectitude and unshaken faith ran like a pulse of fire, a thread of gold.

You may speak of the arch of honor that spans those years of struggle. You may write the names of great generals, admirals, statesmen, senators, and governors upon separate stones. But, on that one stone which bound them together, without which the arch would have fallen into ruin and confusion, you must write LINCOLN'S name.

I mention a third thing for which Lincoln was great. We have had great men who were as cold as the marble in which their statues have been cast. We have had men who had no more warm blood in their hearts than the bronze tablets upon their tombs. We have had great statesmen, great warriors, great philosophers, great men of letters, all of them cold as icebergs, with no popular sympathies, no real tenderness, no heart beneath their garments.

We have had men placed as Lincoln was who had calmly written out his same gigantic campaign and could accept death, peril, or disgrace, as well as honor, with the same calm impassibility with which you might move the knight or the bishop from one square on the chessboard to another. We have had men who left behind them mighty names; and no one child sobbed when they were gone. But not a dry eye appeared amid thousands of children when the splendid, heroic Lincoln, with his wisdom, sagacity, and patriotism, was taken away. He carried a tender heart, the heart of a little child, the heart of a woman when she has given her promise to the man she loves.

Back of that rough, angular form and seemingly uncouth demeanor there lay a heart as white as snow, and so dropping with the love of humanity that, if I were to take out of one of those Christian centuries the heart of the one whom I believed to be the most loving, the most tender, I would take it from the breast of Abraham Lincoln.

What soldier in his standing army, bleeding and with dusty feet, could enter the chamber of any other ruler in this world and plead his cause as a friend? What woman, tearful because her son was in peril, when a stroke of the President's hand would set him free, could anywhere else force her way to him through lines of senators, and then receive consolation? What man, within the memory of man, has ruled without jealousy and fanaticism, and to whom every man in the land could turn his thought, in hope, in prayer, as to a patient or never-failing friend? Was there ever a leader of the American people who got so near the heart of his generation as did Abraham Lincoln? And perhaps, with all his greatness, this is one of his greatest claims to immortal memory. The writer dies; the honored philosopher fades away with the changes of time; the scientific man is blotted out by the record of successive thought; the poet's sweetest lays may be folded away like a garment, to put some newer and better one in its place; but the love of the human heart is the one enduring thing in this world of ours; and where all these things will pass away, the man who is a lover of his country, who is a lover of his native land, is the man whose immortality is best secured, and that man was Abraham Lincoln.

I can say nothing, in this brief review of his work, of the emancipation of the slave, except to say that that patience, wisdom, and infallible instinct as to the right time of doing anything is illustrated in this, perhaps, as no other single incident of his career. And when I come to one effort it seems to me I wanted to lay my fingers on my lips and never speak another word. When he climbed that height at Gettysburg, and stood on the scene of the terrible conflict, on that ground made sacred with the bodies of our patriot soldiers, the eloquence of his lips, the impressiveness of his mien, and the words uttered by his heart through his tongue, made that oration which, in the history of American eloquence, puts culture into the shade, for it was the eloquence of the noblest American upon the noblest occasion in the history of mankind.

In the old days every cathedral had its chime of bells. A new bell had to be cast, and it was to be strung up far into the tower to exorcise the demons and call the people to morning worship. The bell was in process of casting in the mold, and there were joy and gladness. Priests brought the crucibles and bronze articles to the mould, and the molten metal began to make its way toward the great hole in which the cast was being prepared. Suddenly the great gathering was swayed with some sudden emotion. There was a danger of the failure of the cast through insufficient metal. The cry was, What shall be done? It was soon decided. Every one gave something, some article of value to cast into the seething pot. Women tore off their bracelets. Others ran and brought silver vessels; priests brought the appurtenances of the sanctuary and flung them into the seething, boiling furnace; and at last there was sufficient. It cooled, and was swung into the tower, and there never was a sweeter-toned bell in all the world, and the sacrifices that had been made in flinging the treasure into the bell made its notes those of silver and gold as they rang out on the sweet morning air. The old bell that proclaimed liberty at Philadelphia is a useless bell to-day. We have done the casting all these years of that bell of liberty which is to be rung in the ages to come, high up above the people and the sound of the nations and the war and the peace of the world.

We hope and pause when the golden bell is rung, and we seem to hear its silver chiming as it calls to prayer. We hear its deeper notes when it warns us with its significant alarm and joyous clang that it is positively above us. How sweet is that bell of liberty. Let us not forget what makes it sweet is because men have cast sacrifices for the golden hope of manhood and life. Let us not forget that if it rings so sweetly and is to ring forever in the name of liberty, some of that sweetness comes from Abraham Lincoln; for, when that bell was in the molten furnace of war and the crucible of trial, there was cast into it the pure gold of his manly life.—Rev. E. C. Bolles, at Lafayette Camp.]

WE MAKE HISTORY.

We enter the Interior Department—Form the acquaintance of Mrs. Anna M. Cosby—Meet Geo. D. Prentiss and many prominent people—Frequently visit the White House—We hold a seance at Laurie's, the President attending—"Bonnie Doon"—Mrs. Miller causes the piano to dance—The scene at the front depicted—The President advised by "Dr. Bamford" to go to the Army of the Potomac and talk with the soldiery—"The simplest remedies the best"—The President grants a furlough to A. L. Gurney—The President speaks his views upon Spiritualistic communications—Advised not to make the seances public information—Mrs. Miller moves the piano while the President sits upon it.

On the Monday following I found employment (through the kindness of Mrs. Lincoln) in the seed-room, a division of the "Department of the Interior," which was under the control of Mr. Newton. This room was part of a building on F street near Seventh, where fifty to sixty occupants, the majority old ladies, and the balance children between the ages of ten and twelve, found employment. My duties consisted of sewing together the ends of curious little sacks—each sack containing a gill of seed corn, beans, etc., as the case might be; which work was little more than mere pastime. We entered the room at nine in the morning, leaving it at twelve; returning at one, and leaving again at three in the afternoon. For this work I received one dollar per day. A few days later my friend Parnie joined me, also entering this room, doing the same work, and receiving the same compensation.

In the meantime my evenings were well filled with circles, which were attended by many of the most prominent people in Washington. Among those I met and learned to love, and who in turn became warmly attached to myself and friend, was Mrs. Anna M. Cosby, whose father, Mr. Robt. Mills, was the architect of the public buildings of Washington; and whose husband was at this time consul at Geneva (?). Her home was a solid brick mansion on Capitol Hill—historical in its associations; having been known in Washington's day as the "Old Bell Tavern;" afterwards used as a bank until Mr. Mills changed it to a family residence. The old vaults still remained beneath the building; and its quaint arrangement and winding stairway were a novelty to my Northern eyes. The first floor of her house was occupied by John W. Forney; and a beautiful chamber on the second floor was usually occupied by General Simon Cameron when in Washington.

This lady was the patroness, as her father had been patron before her, of the Columbia Fire Company, which was located very near her residence. It was to her and her family that this company was indebted for the many privileges it enjoyed—her father being active in establishing it, and furnishing it with the motto, "The performance of duty insures the protection of God." This lady, after a time, insisted upon our "making her house our home;" and in its refining and elevating atmosphere, surrounded by all that wealth could give, we passed many happy weeks and formed many pleasant associations. At her house I met with Mr. Joshua Speed, Mr. Lincoln's former law partner. At one of her circles, held in her beautiful parlors, I also met Geo. D. Prentiss, the well-known editor of the Louisville Journal." Here I gave many private sittings to distinguished people, whose names I never knew; but who were apparently earnest investigators, and seemed satisfied with the truths they obtained. In short, every moment was filled to the utmost, and the time so occupied passed quickly and pleasantly.

Prior to leaving Mr. Laurie's to become the guest of Mrs. Cosby I had another important interview with President Lincoln. One morning, early in February, we received a note from Mrs. Lincoln, saying she desired us to come over to Georgetown and bring some friends for a seance that evening, and wished the "young ladies" to be present. In the early part of the evening, before her arrival, my little messenger, or "familiar" spirit, controlled me, and declared that (the "long brave," as she denominated him) Mr. Lincoln would also be there. As Mrs. Lincoln had made no mention of his coming in her letter, we were surprised at the statement. Mr. Laurie rather questioned its accuracy; as he said it would be hardly advisable for President Lincoln to leave the White House to attend a spiritual seance anywhere; and that he did not consider it "good policy" to do so.

However, when the bell rang, Mr. Laurie, in honor of his expected guests, went to the door to receive them in person. His astonishment was great to find Mr. Lincoln standing on the threshold, wrapped in his long cloak; and to hear his cordial "Good evening," as he put out his hand and entered. Mr. Laurie promptly exclaimed, "Welcome, Mr. Lincoln, to my humble roof; you were expected" (Mr. Laurie was one of the "old school gentlemen"). Mr. Lincoln stopped in the act of removing his cloak, and said, "Expected! Why, it is only five minutes since I knew that I was coming." He came down from a cabinet meeting as Mrs. Lincoln and her friends were about to enter the carriage, and asked them where they were going. She replied, "To Georgetown; to a circle." He answered immediately, "Hold on a moment; I will go with you." "Yes," said Mrs. Lincoln, "and I was never so surprised in my life. He seemed pleased when Mr. Laurie explained the source

THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

Let Us Be Spiritualists in Deed as Well as in Thought.

The spiritual life is a simple one, for truth is best expressed in a life free from pretensions. The complexities of so-called modern existence are composed of non-essentials.

Unnecessary wants, not genuine needs, cause worry. To worry is to age rapidly. To do one's duty calmly, truthfully, conscientiously, living but "one day at a time," is to remain ever young in spirit.

If the spirit remains young the body will mirror forth the condition of its commander—the soul—in a youthful appearance, free from the frowns of age.

How quickly we recognize the youthfulness in those we meet. We recall with pleasure a calm, kindly face, and we say, when speaking of such a one: "He never worried, but was always hopeful of better things." In our youth, all of us realize quickly that he of the hopeful, kindly countenance belonged to that high order of human beings best described by our youthful but comprehensive term "good."

This "good" man was good because he was a lover of humanity, and he was not afraid to let the light of his deeds so shine that even the babes in arms recognized the sterling quality of his spirituality. We do not remember the name of his religion—indeed, we are not sure that he was a member of a church congregation—but we know he was a good man. His was the great practically applied optimism known in these later days under the various names of Naturalism, Spiritualism, Humanitarianism and New Thought. But even though religion is found with real goodness, we forget the religion and remember the goodness.

The recognition of the trueness and richness of soul possessed by others is therefore not circumscribed by the narrow boundaries of creed or church. To live in order to benefit humanity is truly an ideal worthy of the efforts of all, for if we work without hope of reward we demonstrate in the most unselfish degree our true mission in this preparatory stage of our existence.

If this life were all, if we were here only for a day and tomorrow pass into nothingness, then we could perhaps afford to cherish petty grievances, and seek to "revenge" real or fancied wrongs; but when we fully realize the fact that life here is as one grain to the countless millions of grains of sand on the shores of the ocean in its proportion to the future ages we shall live, then we will see our pettiness and our narrowness in their true light, and our daily thoughts will be broadened accordingly.

It is only through ceasing to rail, and by beginning to help, that we advance. To see the bright lining of our troubles, we must have the illuminating power of a broadened sun of spirituality within.

Let us, then, allow the bright light of the heaven that is within us to shine, forth through our countenances, our deeds, our words, that the world-darkened children of fear may bask in its rays and cease to despair, to jeer, to curse, and begin to take heart of courage to do the world's work cheerfully and well.

By giving we gain, and by gaining we are enabled to give tenfold. True, many of us have neither money nor lands, but we can give kindness and love; for of these we should have an inexhaustible supply.

Let us turn to our good friend, Marcus Aurelius Antoninus. We will question him:

"Do you believe that some men's troubles are too severe?"

Hark to the answer:

"Nothing happens to any man which he is not formed by nature to bear. Things themselves touch not the soul, not in the leas degree; nor have they admission to the soul, nor can they turn or move the soul."

"Do you think that revenge is justifiable?" Hear now the answer of the man who once ruled the Romans:

"The best way of avenging thyself is not to become like the wrong-doer. In the gymnastic exercises suppose that a man has torn thee with his nails, and by dashing against thy head has inflicted a wound. Well, we neither show any signs of vexation, nor are we offended, nor do we suspect him afterwards as a treacherous fellow; and yet we are on our guard against him, not however as an enemy, nor yet with suspicion, but we quietly get out of his way. Something like this let thy behavior be in all other parts of life; let us overlook many things in those who are like antagonists in the gymnasium."

"Should we think much of the future, and plan to be able to meet its problems?" we ask.

"Let not future things disturb thee, for thou wilt come to them, if it shall be necessary, having with thee the same reason which now thou usest for present things. Look within. Within is the fountain of good, and it will ever bubble up. The art of life is more like the wrestler's art than the dancer's in respect of this, that it should stand ready and firm to meet onsets which are sudden and unexpected."

Thus we learn of the ancients' patience and forbearance, wisdom and philosophy, and we build these facts into our structure of memory until we have but to turn to recollection for the references to annotate our book of life.

Learning through the mistakes of others to avoid the disasters that may occur in our own careers seems the part of wisdom, but to bravely meet the smiting hand of our own ignorance is to gain in knowledge.

The spiritual life, then, is a simple life—a life made up of good deeds kindly done, of cheerful words gladly spoken, of personal wrongs hidden and forgotten in the haste to help other unfortunates forget their troubles.

To assist others is but lending to ourselves of the storehouse of life, for no life can be complete in a selfish solitude. We must be unselfish citizens of the world if we would hope to reap the world's lasting benefits.

Let us be Spiritualists in deed as well as in thought, and cease to build up the huge blocks of criticism, coldness, cynicism and unkindness; for the resulting wall will surround and finally envelop in much the same way as that which shut from Mirza's prisoner light and life.

GIRL MENTALLY LIKE INFANT.

Owing to a strange case of mental relapse Miss Mary Scalley, 19 years old, who was a few days ago like any other young woman; bright, active, and enjoying health, to-day is again like a baby, scarcely able to walk and appreciating nothing of what goes on around her. She resides at Morristown, N. J.

Twice before she had these periods of relapse to infancy. She is not weak in intellect, as she was graduated from a parochial school as one of the brightest members of her class.

Her case is not one of insanity, but she is incapable of thought, speech, or responsible action. To all intents and purposes she is an infant. This is a case, no doubt, of spirit control.

That Show Spiritualism's Outreach and Worth.

of our information; and I think it had a tendency to prepare his mind to receive what followed, and to obey the instructions given.

On this occasion, as he entered the parlor, I made bold to say to him, "I would like to speak a word with you, Mr. Lincoln, before you go, after the circle." "Certainly," he said; "remind me, should I forget it."

Mr. and Mrs. Laurie, with their daughter, Mrs. Miller, at his request, sang several fine old Scotch airs—among them, one that he declared a favorite, called "Bonnie Doon." I can see him now, as he sat in the old high-backed rocking-chair; one leg thrown over the arm; leaning back in utter weariness, with his eyes closed, listening to the low, strong, and clear yet plaintive notes, rendered as only the Scotch can sing their native melodies. I looked at his face, and it appeared tired and haggard. He seemed older by years than when I had seen him a few weeks previously. The whole party seemed anxious and troubled; but all interest centered in the chief, and all eyes and thoughts were turned on him. At the end of the song he turned to me and said, "Well, Miss Nettie, do you think you have anything to say to me to-night?" At first I thought he referred to the request I had made when he entered the room. Recollecting myself, however, I said, "If I have not, there may be others who have." He nodded his head in a pleasant manner, saying, "Suppose we see what they will have to tell us."

Among the spirit friends that have ever controlled me since my first development was one I have before mentioned—known as "old Dr. Bamford." He was quite a favorite with Mr. Lincoln. His quaint dialect, old-fashioned methods of expression, straightforwardness in arriving at his subject, together with fearlessness of utterance, recommended him as no finished style could have done. This spirit took possession of me at once. As I learned from those in the circle, the substance of his remarks was as follows: "That a very precarious state of things existed at the front, where General Hooker had just taken command. The army was totally demoralized; regiments stacking arms, refusing to obey orders or to do duty; threatening a general retreat; declaring their purpose to return to Washington. A vivid picture was drawn of the terrible state of affairs, greatly to the surprise of all present, save the chief to whom the words were addressed.

When the picture had been painted in vivid colors, Mr. Lincoln quietly remarked: "You seem to understand the situation. Can you point out the remedy?"

Dr. Bamford immediately replied: "Yes; if you have the courage to use it."

"He smiled," they said, and answered, "Try me." The old doctor then said to him, "It is one of the simplest, and being so simple it may not appeal to you as being sufficient to cope with what threatens to prove a serious difficulty. The remedy lies with yourself. Go in person to the front; taking with you your wife and children; leaving behind your official dignity, and all manner of display. Resist the importunities of officials to accompany you, and take only such attendants as may be absolutely necessary; avoid the high grade officers, and seek the tents of the private soldiers. Inquire into their grievances; show yourself to be what you are, 'The Father of your People.' Make them feel that you are interested in their sufferings, and that you are not unmindful of the many trials which beset them in their march through the dismal swamps, whereby both their courage and numbers have been depleted."

He quietly remarked, "If that will do any good, it is easily done."

The doctor instantly replied, "It will do all that is required. It will unite the soldiers as one man. It will unite them to you in bands of steel. And now, if you would prevent a serious, if not fatal, disaster to your cause, let the news be promulgated at once, and disseminated throughout the camp of the Army of the Potamac. Have it scattered broadcast that you are on the eve of visiting the front; that you are not talking of it, but that it is settled that you are going, and are now getting into readiness. This will stop insubordination and hold the soldiers in check; being something to divert their minds, and they will wait to see what your coming portends."

He at once said, "It shall be done." A long conversation then followed between the doctor and Mr. Lincoln regarding the state of affairs, and the war generally. The old doctor told him "that he would be renominated and re-elected to the presidency." They said that he sadly smiled when this was told him, saying, "It is hardly an honor to be coveted, save one could find it his duty to accept it."

After the circle was over, Mr. Laurie said, "Mr. Lincoln, is it possible that affairs are as bad as has been depicted?" He said, "They can hardly be exaggerated; but I ask as a favor of all present that they do not speak of these things. The Major there," pointing to an officer of that rank who was in their party, "has just brought despatches from the 'front' depicting the state of affairs pretty much as our old friend has shown it; and we were just having a Cabinet meeting regarding the matter, when something, I know not what, induced me to leave the room and come down stairs, when I found Mrs. Lincoln in the act of coming here. I felt it might be of service for me to come; I did not know wherefore." He dropped his head as he said this—leaning forward in his chair as if he were thinking aloud. Then, looking up suddenly, he remarked, "Matters are pretty serious down there, and perhaps the simplest remedy is the best. I have often noticed in life that little things have sometimes greater weight than larger ones." As they rose to depart, he turned to me, saying, "Now I will hear what you have to say to me." Going to one side of the parlor, we sat down, and I laid before him the case of a friend who had been nearly two years in the service in the Army of the Potomac, and who was a lieutenant in the Thirtieth N. Y. Regiment. He had seen hard service in camp and field, and had never asked for a furlough during that period. At this time, as his colonel was ordered to Washington on duty for a few weeks, he sent in a petition to the War Department for a furlough, signed by all the superior officers of his regiment and brigade. Not doubting the granting of the furlough, nor waiting for its arrival, feeling sure of its coming and being forwarded, he went with his colonel to Washington. Unfortunately, the day before, he had received the announcement that the application had been rejected, and that an order was then at the department for his arrest for "absence without leave." I stated these facts in full to Mr. Lincoln, and said to him, "This young man is a true soldier, and was one of the first to respond to the call for troops. He has no desire or disposition to avoid or shirk his duty, and is intending to return and give himself up as soon as his colonel's business is completed. It occurred to me that you would be kind enough to interpose your hand between him and the consequences of his rashness in leaving the camp before the arrival of his furlough." He pleasantly smiled, and said, "I have so much to think of now, I shall forget all about this. You write it all out to me, giving me his name and regiment, and bring it to me tomorrow." Feeling sure of my cause, I was delighted, and thought of the pleasant surprise I had in store for my friend.

Mr. Lincoln bade us all a pleasant "good night" and departed, leaving us to talk over the curious circumstances of his coming and of its results.

It was at this seance that Mrs. Belle Miller gave an example of her power as a "moving medium," and highly amused and interested us by causing the piano to "waltz around the room," as was facetiously remarked in several recent newspaper articles. The true statement is as follows: Mrs. Miller played upon the piano (a three-corner grand), and under her influence it "rose and fell," keeping time to her touch in a perfectly regular manner. Mr. Laurie suggested that, as an added "test" of the invisible power that moved the piano, Mrs. Miller (his daughter) should place her hand on the instrument, standing at arm's length from it, to show that she was in no wise connected with its movement other than as agent. Mr. Lincoln then placed his hand underneath the piano, at the end nearest Mrs. Miller, who placed her left hand upon his to demonstrate that neither strength nor pressure was used. In this position the piano rose and fell a number of times at her bidding, At Mr. Laurie's desire the President changed his position to another side, meeting with the same result.

The President, with a quaint smile, said, "I think we can hold down that instrument." Whereupon he climbed upon it, sitting with his legs dangling over the side, as also did Mr. Somes, S. P. Kase, and a soldier in the uniform of a major (who, living, will recall the strange scene) from the Army of the Potomac. The piano, notwithstanding this enormous added weight, continued to wabble about until the sitters were glad "to vacate the premises." We were convinced that there were no mechanical contrivances to produce the strange result, and Mr. Lincoln expressed himself perfectly satisfied that the motion was caused by some "invisible power;" and when Mr. Somes remarked, "When I have related to my acquaintances, Mr. President, that which I have experienced tonight, they will say, with a knowing look and wise demeanor, 'You were psychologized, and as a matter of fact (versus fancy) you did not see what you in really did see." Mr. Lincoln quietly replied, "You should bring such person here and when the piano seems to rise, have him slip his foot under the leg and be convinced (doubtless) by the weight of evidence resting upon his understanding."

When the laughter caused by this rally had subsided, the President wearily sank into an arm-chair, "the old tired, anxious look returning to his face."

This never-to-be-forgotten incident occurred on the fifth day of February, 1863.

I believe that Mr. Lincoln was satisfied and convinced that the communications he received through me were wholly independent of my volition, and in every way superior to any manifestation that could have been given by me as a physical being. This he affirmed in my presence and in my hearing in answer to a question by Mr. Somes as to what he thought of the source of what he had experienced and heard from time to time in the form of Spiritualistic manifestations. He replied, "I am not prepared to describe the intelligence that controls this young girl's organism. She certainly could have no knowledge of the facts communicated to me, nor of what was transpiring in my cabinet meeting prior to my joining this circle, nor of affairs at the front [the army], nor regarding transpiring events which are known to me only, and which I have not imparted to any one, and which have not been made public."

As he spoke, his face was earnest and in repose, and he laid one hand in the other impressively (as was his custom). He likewise comprehended that I was ignorant of the very facts surrounding the information of which I was the agent.

It has frequently been stated that Mr. Lincoln was a Spiritualist. That question is left open for general judgment. I do know that he held communication with numerous mediums, both at the White House and at other places, and among his mediumistic friends were Charles Foster, Charles Colchester, Mrs. Lucy A. Hamilton, and Charles Redmond, who warned Mr. Lincoln of the danger that faced him before he made that famous trip between Philadelphia and Washington, on which occasion he donned the Scotch cap and cape; and which warning saved him from assassination.

If he had not had faith in Spiritualism, he would not have connected himself with it, and would not have had any connections with it, especially in peculiarly dangerous times, while the fate of the nation was in peril. Again, had he declared an open belief in the subject, he would have been pronounced insane and probably incarcerated.

A man does not usually follow or obey dictation in which he has no faith, and which does not contain information of active present value to him. This argument, together with his following of the spirit dictation which passed through me, goes a great way toward a critical and correct judgment in this matter, especially when verification is at hand. It is also true that Mrs. Lincoln was more enthusiastic regarding the subject than her husband, and openly and avowedly professed herself connected with the new religion.

Mr. Somes frequently warned me that it would be unwise to talk with newspaper men, or to answer any of the many inquiries that were constantly made regarding the subject of our presidential seances—saying impressively, "Do not make these matters public property in any such manner at the present time. Reserve your statements of experiences until sufficient time has elapsed to remove any condemnatory criticism, which would naturally be caused by the present excitement of war, and for the time when the people are ready to look upon past and present events with coolness and correctness, at which time a true and dispassionate judgment will be reached, for you will then receive an impartial hearing, and at the same time make evident the truths of Spiritualism." He added, "You are at liberty to quote me and to use my name in connection with any events herein stated in which I was a participant." The value of his opinion is apparent, and I may add that I followed this advice implicitly. The time has arrived when we can criticise freely, judge dispassionately, and reach a true conclusion regarding those events which had to do with the greatest man of his time—the chief actor in the tragedy of modern years, which centered upon us the gaze of the civilized world.

PERILOUS TIMES.

I make a strange error—The President visits the Army of the Potomac at the instigation of the spirits—Mrs. Lincoln is distracted, and we comfort her—A sitting while the battle of Chancellorsville goes on and the result forteold—We depart with an armful of flowers—Visit to Mount Pleasant Hospital, where father greets us.

The next day was Sunday, and Mr. Lincoln had evidently forgotten that fact when he bade me bring him my request in writing. I therefore used a part of the day to write out a plain statement of the case. I considered it almost a State document, addressed it "To the President of the United States"; and thoughtlessly, or rather with great deliberation, believing it necessary, signed my full baptismal name to the paper. Since I had responded to a name, I had been called "Nettie" by old and young, and had almost forgotten that my proper name was "Henrietta."

Sunday morning's issue of John W. Forney's "Gazette" born in startling headlines: "The President is about to visit the Army of the Potomac." Then followed a statement of what gunboat was in preparation to take him and his family to Fortress Monroe; and other matter showing literal obedience to the directions given the night previous. These papers, I learned, were scattered by the thousand throughout the army, as quickly as they could be conveyed there.

On Monday morning, with my paper in hand, I visited the White House. Going up to the waiting room, I sent it in by "Edward," and anxiously awaited the result. Twenty minutes or more must have passed when "Edward" came out, and said, "The President desires that you call to-morrow." I was thunderstruck; not knowing what this might indicate. I knew that without the consent and knowledge of my friend I had furnished the full facts of his whereabouts and his acts to headquarters; and knew not how my action might be considered by him and his colonel. Startled and full of doubt, I walked to the broad stairway, and when halfway down met the major (whose name I have forgotten, but who was with the President on the occasion of the sitting the Saturday previous), who instantly recognized me, and raised his cap and bowed pleasantly. I left the White House, going to the Postoffice Department for my mail, then returned to Georgetown to find the major awaiting me. He came to me as I entered and said, "Mr. Lincoln sent me to you with this note. He says he thinks it will answer every purpose. He told me to tell you he had left it without date, as you could not tell him the precise date of your friend leaving the camp, and being without date, it therefore covers all back time. He would have given it to you in person, but he did not recognize the name attached to the foot of the paper containing the statement. When I went into the room," he added, "after meeting you on the stairs, the President took up the paper and said, in a perplexed way, 'This lady states that I requested her to write this out. I do not remember the name or the circumstance, and yet there is something familiar about it.' I stepped up to Mr. Lincoln, and glancing at the name, replied, 'It is that little medium we saw in Georgetown.' 'Oh, yes,' he exclaimed, 'I fully remember now. Go out and bring her in.' I hurried out," added the major; "but you having left, I failed to find you." He then said, 'This matter must be attended to at once,' and writing on this card, as you see, he inclosed it in an envelope and bade me bring it to you." I opened it and read the following: "Leave of absence is granted to A. L. Gurney, Comp. G, 30th N. Y. Reg., and he will report to his company Feb. 17, 1863"—thus giving him ten days' additional leave (the time was afterwards extended to the 27th, merely changing the date). I have no doubt this gentleman treasures to this day that souvenir of our martyred President. I thanked the major for his kindness, and bade him extend to Mr. Lincoln my grateful acknowledgment, impulsively remarking, "How good of him to do this thing!" To which the major replied, "It is a common thing for him to do these acts. He is all the time doing something of the kind."

The President's visit to the "front" and the ovation tendered him showed the spontaneous uprising of a people to receive a loved ruler. How he was literally borne on the shoulders of soldiers through the camp, and how everywhere the "boys in blue" rallied around him, all grievances being forgotten and restored, and his leaving a united and devoted army behind him when he returned to Washington,—are matters of history too well known to bear repeating.

He did not achieve the victory of carrying out to the letter, without a struggle, the directions of our unseen friends. Mrs. Laurie and myself visited the White House in the interval of the preparation and the time of departure; and Mrs. Lincoln informed us that they were being besieged by applications from members of both houses, and cabinet officers and their wives, for permission to go with them. And she remarked, in her quick, impulsive way; "But I tell Mr. Lincoln, if we are going to take the spirits' advice, let us do it fully, and then there can be no responsibility resting with us if it fail." I was controlled at this time, and "They" impressed upon her the importance of carrying this out as strictly as was consistent; as it was all important that the "man," not "the President," should visit the army. Disunionists had labored to fill the minds of the soldiers with the idea that the government at Washington was rioting in the good things of life and surrounded by pomp and display, while the soldiers were left to die in the swamps, neglected and forgotten; it was therefore necessary "that they should see the man in his simplicity," and that he should carry with him a personal influence which would be felt throughout the camp. The wisdom of his action is told in the result.

I think it was in May of that year that the battle of Chancellorsville was fought. My father was then with my eldest brother in hospital in Washington. Intending to visit him, I went by permission of Mrs. Lincoln to the White House hothouse to obtain a bouquet of flowers for him. Miss Parnie and myself applied to the private entrance, expecting only to receive the flowers and depart; Mrs. Cuthbert, Mrs. Lincoln's waiting-woman, eagerly met us at the door. "Oh, my dear young ladies," she exclaimed in her broken French fashion, "the madam is destracted. Come to her, I beg of you. She wants you very much." Surprised at her earnestness, we went up-stairs and were ushered into her bedroom. Mrs. Lincoln, in a loose wrapper, her long beautiful hair down her back and over her shoulders, was distractedly walking up and down the room. As she saw me she came forward and exclaimed, "Oh, Miss Nettie, such dreadful news; they are fighting at the front; such terrible slaughter; and all our generals are killed and our army is in full retreat; such is the latest news. Oh, I am glad you have come. Will you sit down a few moments and see if we can get anything from 'beyond?'"

No hint of the battle had as yet reached the public. I was surprised. I threw aside my things and we at once sat down. "Pinkie" controlled me instantly, and, in her own original way, assured Mrs. Lincoln that her alarm was groundless; that while a great battle had been fought and was still in progress, our forces were fully holding their own; and that none of the generals, as she had been informed, were slain or injured. She bade her have no fear whatever; that they would get better news by nightfall, and the next day would bring still more cheering results. This calmed her somewhat, and after I awoke she talked very earnestly with me to know if I fully trusted and believed in what was said through me. I assured her of my confidence in whatever was communicated, and it seemed to give her courage. It was now approaching one o'clock, and Mr. Lincoln entered the room; he was bowed as if bent with trouble, his face looking anxious and careworn. He shook my hand in a listless way and kindly inquired how I was, shaking hands with my friend also. He sat down at a little stand on which Mrs. Cuthbert had placed a cup of tea and a plate of crackers. It seemed that it was his custom at this hour to partake of this frugal lunch.

Mrs. Lincoln instantly began to tell him what had been said. He looked up with quick interest. My friend Parnie said, "Perhaps Mr. Lincoln would prefer to hear it direct; would you not like to, Mr. Lincoln?" He said, "If it would not tire your friend too much, yes." I hastened to assure him that I felt no weariness whatever, and again I was soon under control. This time it was the strong, clear utterance of one we had learned to call "Wisdom"; and Parnie told me that Mr. Lincoln listened intently to every word. For twenty minutes "he" talked to him, stating clearly the condition of affairs at the front; assuring him of what news he would receive by nightfall, and what the morrow would bring forth; and that in no wise was the battle disastrous; and though not decisive particularly in character, was sufficiently so to be a gain, not a loss, to the Union cause. He brightened visibly under the assurances given; and my friend said she had never seen me more impressive or convincing when under control.

Evidently "they" felt his need in that hour, and met it. When I awoke his tea stood untasted and cold, and as none seemed to think of it that should have done so, my friend quietly arose, and, taking it from the stand, handed it to Mrs. Cuthbert, and said, "Change this for a hot cup and bring it soon." No one seemed to think she was stepping out of her place in thus thinking of the weary man before us. It was quickly brought, and he drank it with a relish, but left the crackers untasted. He shook us warmly by the hand, and with a pleasant smile passed back to his private apartments.

I need not say that our hands were well filled with flowers when we left the White House. However, it was then too late to go to the camp. The next morning, on our way to the hospital, we called at the White House and received from Mrs. Cuthbert the assurance that the news had been received as predicted, and that "Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln were both feeling much better and full of hope."

Taking the cars at Fourteenth street, we made our visit to Mount Pleasant Hospital. Its thousands of clean, white empty tents, full of little cot-beds, suggested the possibilities of war, but presented none of its horrors. My brother was somewhat better, although still in bed; and my father was glad to see his visitors. We stayed a few hours, and he showed us over the departments; taking us to the surgeons' headquarters, where all seemed quiet and peaceful. We returned to the city, little dreaming of the scene that would greet us when we again visited the camp.

A TEST SEANCE.

We are requested to attend a private seance at the White House—The President asks me to demonstrate my "rare gift," as he called it—The two soldiers present in citizen's dress—"Perfectly satisfactory," said Mr. Lincoln; "Miss Nettie does not require eyes to do anything"—Tracing lines upon the map; I do not hear the import of the seance—Those were not days for trifling—An account of a witty application of a part of Knox's poem, "Why Should the Spirit of Mortal Be Proud?"—The complete poem.

There was another meeting with Mr. Lincoln which is interesting and of considerable value. Shortly after my return to Washington, and while visiting Major Chorpenning one evening, Mr. Somes called. After an exchange of compliments, he stated that he had been requested to have me attend a seance, and as the same was of a private character he was not at liberty to say more. We all suspected the truth, however, and I instantly made ready to accompany him. After entering the carriage provided for the occasion, he informed us that our destination was the White House, explaining that while at the War Department that afternoon he had met Mr. Lincoln coming from Secretary Stanton's office. Mr. Somes bowed to the President and was passing onward when Mr. Lincoln stopped him, asking whether Miss Colburn was still in the city, and if so, whether it were possible to have her visit the White House that evening. Upon a reply in the affirmative to both questions, Mr. Lincoln remarked, "Please bring her to the White House at eight or nine o'clock, but consider the matter confidential."

By the time Mr. Somes had completed his recital we were at the door of that historic mansion, and a servant, who was evidently on the watch for us, quickly opened the door and we were hurried up stairs to the executive chamber, where Mr. Lincoln and two gentlemen were awaiting our coming. Mr. Lincoln gave an order to the servant, who retired, and a moment later Mrs. Lincoln entered. I am satisfied from what followed that she was summoned on my account to place me more at ease than otherwise, under the circumstances, would have been the case. Mr. Lincoln then quietly stated that he wished me to give them an opportunity to witness something of my "rare gift," as he called it, adding, "You need not be afraid, as these friends have seen something of this before." The two gentlemen referred to were evidently military officers, as was indicated by the stripe upon their pantaloons, although their frock coats, buttoned to the chin, effectually concealed any insignia or mark of rank. One of these gentlemen was quite tall and heavily built, with auburn hair and dark eyes, and side whiskers, and of decided military bearing. The other gentleman was of average height, and I somehow received the impression that he was lower in rank than his companion. He had light brown hair and blue eyes, was quick in manner, but deferential towards his friend, whose confirmation he involuntarily sought or indicated by his look of half appeal while the conversation went on.

We sat quiet for a few moments before I became entranced. One hour later I became conscious of my surroundings, and was standing by a long table, upon which was a large map of the Southern States. In my hand was a lead pencil, and the tall man, with Mr. Lincoln, was standing beside me, bending over the map, while the younger man was standing on the other side of the table, looking curiously and intently at me. Somewhat embarrassed, I glanced around to note Mrs. Lincoln quietly conversing in another part of the room. The only remarks I heard were these: "It is astonishing," said Mr. Lincoln, "how every

Some Experiences in Spiritual Manifestations.

A friend to whom I had written concerning a seance I had witnessed some years ago, writes me in answer, under date of March 15, 1905: "I doubt not there is something in spiritual phenomena, but what and how much I don't know. I have encountered many frauds in that line; but this may be taken only to prove that there is a genuine."

We have a young lady friend who plays beautifully on the piano without knowing one note from another, or one key from another. She has never been known to play a piece that is written. When she gets through playing a piece she will say, "That was Beethoven," Liszt, or Mendelssohn," etc., as the case may be. She claims that she is controlled by these great musicians.

Sometime ago she and her mother began to hear what seemed to be telegraphic ticking on the table and chairs, without their touching them. It was new to them. She invited me and a learned friend of mine to bring an operator and test it one night. We got a young man who had never attended a seance—got him at one of the Western Union offices. He got intelligible communications and conversed with the invisible operator by tapping on the table with his pencil. The young woman and her mother know absolutely nothing about telegraphy. The name given by the spirit operator was that of a former acquaintance of the medium, who had committed suicide. He was a telegraphic operator. The medium said he used to call her by a name which was not her real name. She told the operator we took there to ask him what he called her. He gave it by ticks, and the operator called it out.

Once I invited a noted medium to give a seance in my parlor. I invited in my neighbors until we had fifteen present in all, mostly unbelievers. After the dark room performance was over, the floating musical instruments, etc., (the two guitars and violin being my own) all of which was wonderful, we sat down in the room and turned on the lights. Mr. S., the medium handed me his slate and asked me to examine it. I did so and rubbed it well on both sides, to be sure there was no writing on it. He then put a piece of slate pencil on it and took the slate by one end and reached it out at arm's length, placed the other end against the wall. He then turned to my wife and said, "Mrs. ——, if there is any message you would like to have from the spirit world, call for it." She said: "I wish some one would tell me something about M—," our little girl who had passed over some years before, about which the medium knew nothing. Immediately there began a sound as of some one writing on the slate with a slate pencil. After a little while it stopped. The medium then asked, "Are you through?" There were three ticks on the slate as if done with the pencil. Then he said, "Sign your name," and there was a little more writing and three more taps. The medium then without looking at the slate handed it to Mrs. —— and said, "Read what is on it."

I got up and went around to look over her shoulder. These words were written on the slate as clearly as any one could with a slate pencil, "Mabel is with me and we are happy. Mary."

Mary was Mrs. ——'s sister. Mrs. —— said, "why that is Mary's handwriting." She then got one of Mary's letters and found that on the slate certain letters were made in her peculiar style in the old letter. Farce was simply impossible in this case. Let us look further. AN INVESTIGATOR.

THE CHRISTIAN ISRAELITES.

Different Religious Cults That Arise Frof Time to Time.

If it is difficult to originate a new joke it is still more difficult to invent a new religion. The sense of humor is not so wide-spread as the sense of the supernatural. Man has been hammering away at religion ever since he began to feel that he was at all different from other animals. Hence a Moses is likely to appear long before a Mark Twain.

The "Christian Israelites" over at Benton Harbor, Mich., are regarded as "freaks." Perhaps they deserve no better title. But a "freak" flower is usually one which has just been produduced by some caprice of nature. The "Christian Israelites" and most other modern religious sects are not "freaks" in the meaning of the word. They are for the most part adapters of religious and metaphysical ideas which have run down through human history from an exceedingly early date.

The "Christian Israelites," for instance, have a queer way of dividing the human being up into three parts. Body and soul are not enough for them. They talk about body, soul and spirit, and quote several passages from the bible in proof of their phraseology. But this division is an old one. The ancient Christian fathers had a special name for it. It was called trichotomy, and was quite different from the modern tracheotomy. It signified that those who believed in it held the body to be one thing, the animal soul (which we share with all other living creatures) to be a second thing, and the spirit to be a third and divine thing.

But the early Christian controversialists did not discover this theory. It is still studied in our universities out of the text books on Greek philosophy. The Greeks speculated about it as they did about everything else.

To come to more modern instances, most of the theories about the end of the world now taught by the "Israelites" can be found in the writings of Joanna Southcote, who lived in the eighteenth century. She believed that she was the woman who in the book of Revelation is promised the uncomfortable fate of being driven out into the wilderness. She prophesied the end of the world and then because of the exigencies of the situation postponed it several times. Toward the end of her life she believed that she was about to give birth to a second Messiah, but died before the accomplishment of her intention.

It will hardly do to blame the present age for the appearance of strange cults. It must be confessed that the present age perpetuates some of them. But that is, after all, a minor fault. They were handed down to us by our ancestors. We didn't invent them. We couldn't. They were all invented long ago. If now and then a magazine writer arises who thinks we are going crazy because we furnish the soil for strange religious growths, he should stop for awhile to contemplate the age which came before us.

line she has drawn conforms to the plan agreed upon." "Yes," answered the older soldier, "It is very astonishing." Looking up, they both saw that I was awake, and they instantly stepped back, while Mr. Lincoln took the pencil from my hand and placed a chair for me.

Then madam and Mr. Somes at once joined us, Mr. Somes asking, "Well, was everything satisfactory?" "Perfectly," responded Mr. Lincoln; "Miss Nettie does not seem to require eyes to do anything," smiling pleasantly. The conversation then turned, designedly I felt, to commonplace matters.

Shortly afterwards, when about leaving, Mr. Lincoln said to us in a low voice, "It is best not to mention this meeting at present." Assuring him of silence upon the question, we were soon again on our way to the major's.

Mr. Somes informed me that he heard enough in the opening remarks of the spirit to convince him that the power controlling knew why I had been summoned. He said I walked to the table unaided and requested that a pencil be handed me, after which the President requested Mr. Somes and Mrs. Lincoln to remain where they were at the end of the room. "In accordance with this request," said Mr. Somes, "we paid no attention to what was being said or done, further than to notice you tracing lines upon the map, and once one of the gentlemen re-sharpened the pencil for you." I never knew the purport of this meeting, nor can I say that Mr. Somes ever heard more regarding the strange affair. That it was important may be supposed, for those were not days for the indulgence of idle curiosity in any direction, nor was Mr. Lincoln a man to waste his time in giving exhibitions in occult science for the amusement of his friends.

The impressions left upon my mind could not be otherwise than gratifying, in finding myself the recipient of such unusual attentions, and, for the occasion, the central figure in what appeared to be a mysterious and momentous consultation. Had it been simply an experiment to test my mediumship, Mr. Somes and Mrs. Lincoln would have been included in the group that gathered around the table. Should the two stranger participants in that seance be now living, and by any chance these lines should be read by them, they will readily recall the scene, and fully recognize the incident from the remarks that were uttered at the time. I am confident that my services were appreciated, and that the spiritual guidance which found utterance through my lips was confirmatory of the plans which they had already prepared. As in this instance, so in many others, has this powerful aid been called upon and used to advantage, to further important national and personal interests, and accomplish results that simple human knowledge could not achieve.

Mr. Lincoln's fancy for poetry and song inclined towards those melodies which appealed to his emotional nature, as is illustrated by his keen appreciation of Mrs. Laurie's "Bonnie Doon," and his favorite poem, "Why Should the Spirit of Mortal Be proud?" I remember hearing him refer to the touching poem upon an occasion of peculiar interest, at which time he recited a part of it, applying the verses to the occasion in a very pleasant and happy manner. This incident is worthy of appearing in print:

One morning in January, 1863, Mrs. Laurie desired me to go to the White House and inquire after Mrs. Lincoln's health. Mrs. Laurie had visited Mrs. Lincoln the previous day, and found her prostrated by one of her severe headaches. It was about eleven o'clock when I called. Upon sending up my name and inquiry to Mrs. Lincoln, I was requested to walk up stairs to her rooms, where I found Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln, a gentleman and two ladies. I was cordially received by Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln, and presented to the guests, whose names were not mentioned, and when I noticed their glances, I knew that they had been told I was a "medium." After explaining my errand and being about to withdraw, Mrs. Lincoln asked whether I felt equal to the task of a seance. Noticing that all were expectant, I signified my willingness and reseated myself.

After Mrs. Lincoln had assisted me to remove my wraps, she requested that the friends present do the same. They declined. Whereupon, the gentleman, who was their escort, laughingly remarked, as he indicated the lady nearest him: "It is useless to urge Anna, Mrs. Lincoln, for she thinks she looks better in her new bonnet." To which Anna replied, "That she believed she did, and felt very proud of it." Mr. Lincoln, who was seated, raised his hands with a comical gesture, and quoted a part of his favorite poem, "Why Should the Spirit of Mortal Be Proud?" The gentleman said, "You are familiar with that poem." To which the President replied, "Perfectly; it is a favorite of mine; and, let me ask, what could be finer in expression than the lines:

"'The maid on whose cheek, on whose brow, in whose eye,
Shone beauty and pleasure—her triumphs are by;
And the memory of those who loved and praised,
Are alike from the minds of the living erased.'"

Continuing to the line:

"Have quietly mingled their bones in the dust."

At this point I became unconscious, and awoke a half hour later to find the company betraying much emotion, and while recovering myself, they talked together in low tones, and in an animated manner. This was interrupted by Mr. Lincoln rousing himself with an effort, saying: "I must go, and am afraid I have already stayed too long." Shaking hands with his visitors, he turned in his kind way to me, and, while warmly shaking my hand, said: "I thank you, Miss Nettie, for obliging us; we have deeply enjoyed our little circle." As he left the room, the others expressed the same sentiment; and as I was preparing to don my bonnet and shawl, Mrs. Lincoln requested me to wait. She rang the bell for the servant, who soon after returned with two beautiful bouquets, one of which she said was for Mrs. Laurie, the other for myself. The party then shook hands with me, rising as they did so. I was treated by them with the same courtesy as would have been offered any friend or old acquaintance. The following poem is the entire text of the part quoted by Mr. Lincoln on this occasion:

Oh! Why Should the Spirit of Mortal Be Proud?

Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud?
Like a swift-fleeting meteor, a fast-flying cloud,
A flash of the lightning, a break of the wave,
He passeth from life to his rest in the grave.

The leaves of the oak and the willow shall fade,
Be scattered around, and together be laid;
And the young and the old, and the low and the hi
Shall moulder to dust, and together shall lie.

The infant a mother attended and loved;
The mother that infant's affection who proved;
The husband, that mother and infant who blest,—
Each, all, are away to their dwellings of rest.

[The maid on whose cheek, on whose brow, in whose Shone beauty and pleasure,—her triumphs are by;
And the memory of those who loved her and praised,
Are alike from the minds of the living erased.]

The hand of the king that the sceptre hath borne,
The brow of the priest that the mitre hath worn,
The eye of the sage, and the heart of the brave,
Are hidden and lost in the depths of the grave.

The peasant, whose lot was to sow and to reap,
The herdsman, who climbed with his goats up the steep,
The beggar, who wandered in search of his bread,
Have faded away like the grass that we tread.

[The saint, who enjoyed the communion of heaven,
The sinner, who dared to remain unforgiven,
The wise and the foolish, the guilty and just,
Have quietly mingled their bones in the dust.]

So the multitude goes—like the flower or the weed
That withers away to let others succeed;
So the multitude comes—even those we behold,
To repeat every tale that has often been told.

For we are the same our fathers have been;
We see the same sights that our fathers have seen;
We drink the same stream, we view the same sun,
And run the same course our fathers have run.

The thoughts we are thinking, our fathers would think;
From the death we are shrinking, our fathers would shrink;
To the life we are clinging, they also would cling;—
But it speeds from us all like a bird on the wing.

They loved—but the story we cannot unfold;
They scorned—but the heart of the haughty is cold;
They grieved—but no wail from their slumber will come;
They joyed—but the tongue of their gladness is dumb.

They died—ay, they died;—we things that are now,
That walk on the turf that lies over their brow,
And make in their dwellings a transient abode,
Meet the things that they met on their pilgrimage road.

Yea! hope and despondency, pleasure and pain,
Are mingled together in sunshine and rain;
And the smile and the tear, the song and the dirge,
Still follow each other, like surge upon surge.

'Tis the wink of an eye—'tis the draught of a breath—
From the blossom of health to the paleness of death,
From the gilded saloon to the bier and the shroud:—
Oh! why should the spirit of mortal be proud?

DECLARES RELIGION A SCIENCE, AND THE ETHER TO BE THE TRUE AND VERITABLE GOD.

The following from the New York Truth Seeker, by Prof. S. R. Shepherd, an old-time Spiritualist of Leavenworth, Kans., will be read with special interest by Spiritualists. It looks very much as if the Kansas man had worked out the solution of that greatest problem of the ages—Religion—and thus discovered the common scientific basis of all religions.—Wm. Scott, M. D., Kansas City, Mo.

True religion is a science—the science of perfect normal development and adjustment to the laws of the universe. True religion leads man to study Infinite law, to idealize good and to seek the realization of his highest hopes and aspirations. That the material parts of the universe are but infinitesimal specks in the boundless realm of etheric life and energy is beyond question.

In the long and earnest search to find out God I proceeded in the true scientific manner, he representing the unknown quantity or equation. He made all the sciences, hence must be the great master scientist of the universe. He makes the sun to shine, the rain to fall, and the grass to grow, hence must be the omnipotent, omnipresent energy which moves and directs the heavenly bodies and causes every effect both great and small in the boundless universe.

Electricity is vibratory. Life is essentially electrical. Spirit is electrical. Every effect or phenomenon in the universe is of electrical causation. The earth and every stick, stone, straw, grain of sand, or piece of matter is an electrical magnet with positive and negative poles. God is the great fountain of life, love, and potential energy, the great, etheric dynamo of creative power, the great "central," while we are tiny fragile electrical organisms or machines, helplessly dependent upon the creative power from which we emanated.

And naturally the query—why in the name of Infinite goodness should we not be able to develop some latent, divine faculty, a sixth or ether sense, and like the electric boats or motors when exhausted call up at will some great "central," as if by wireless telephone, and place ourselves in such relation of receptive oneness as to receive an influx of new energy, life and courage.

Ten years ago, after twenty years of patient observation, study, and experimentation, my fondest hopes were realized in finding the ether vibration or energy to be, indeed, the veritable "ever present help in time of need," the "staff of support," the "comforter," etc., so earnestly and vividly portrayed by the deeply religious of all ages.

My experiences and continued studies during the past ten years furnish to me absolute demonstration of the identity of this divine energy with the God or Heavenly Father of the Christian and Mohammedan and the One Supreme Being of other religions—the common source and basis of all religious experience and phenomena.

Here is a "working hypothesis" worthy of the investigation of all honest, scientific, truth-seeking souls. It accounts for everything hitherto unexplainable in the world's history of religion and religious phenomena. The spiritually alive and quickened of all times and religions have experienced the benefit of retreating at will into vibratory unison with this divine energy, though having no proper conception of its nature. Victims of false education, and handicapped by intellects working at cross-purposes with the verities of their own subjective lives and experiences, they yet sought help and healing from the ecclesiastical gods of their sects but received it instead from Etho, Ethos or Etherion, the Infinite source of all life, energy and causation.

Man's first exercise of the religious instinct is the childhood love of mother. Nothing quickens to life the religious impulse like a sense of helpless dependence. Out of this feeling and in response to the mother's love is born the child's love for its mother. The relation between the two is the divinest and holiest expression of the religious instinct. The mother is the child's divinity, the all-in-all, the supreme good. If his love and adoration for her grows year by year he is laying deep and strong the foundation for the broader exercise of the religious instinct in full spiritual development and in his relations to God and man. He grows to manhood, the mother has passed to the higher life, but he is still her child and a child of the Infinite. In sickness or loneliness or sorrow he instinctively reaches out to some divine power for that invigorating cordial of consolation he in childhood received from "Mother." And if with such depth of emotion as to strike the chord of divine sympathy and come into vibration with the soul of the universe he will receive comfort and strength and courage and healing in fullest measure.

The idea of religion being an inductive science, divided into "pure" and "applied," the same as mathematics and other sciences, will no doubt strike the unthinking as "awful" but such it unquestionably is. And being so its claims upon the intelligence of mankind become a thousand times stronger. Hence it will not be necessary for men to apologize for being caught coming out of the scientized church of the future.

Pure religion treats of divine laws, principles, forces, and elements, while applied religion concerns their combinations and classification into formulas and axioms and applies him to work out the fullest measure of happiness and attain the highest and most glorious achievement of destiny possible to human endeavor. For pure religious science is just as exact in its equations as algebra, and applied religious science is just as unerring in its methods and certain in its results as geometry.

To develop the "ether faculty" and utilize the vital relation of subconscious soul communion with the Infinite is no more to be caviled at by the spiritually atrophied and dead than are the demonstrated facts of wireless telegraphy, telepathy, hypnotism, and even the telephone which was scoffed at when projected a few years ago. This is a world of wonders and the half has not been told.

True prayer, which is no more and no less than telepic communion with the Etho-God is as scientific and hygienic as sleep, rest or nutrition, but those who never developed their spiritual natures and have not learned and practiced that wonderful art divine can of course see no sense or utility in it. No more can the blind or dim-sighted realize the beautiful tints of the rainbow, or the deaf or hard of hearing sense the delicate symphonies of the eolian harp.

Let all the spiritually dormant, in church and out (for church lines prove nothing), wake up from the sleep of death and flee from the annihilistic wrath to come, for the law of the survival of the fit is as inexorable in dealing with spiritual organisms as with physical.

Let us be wise and take thought for the morrow. Let us practice spirit culture as well as physical, for unless any organism both feeds and functions it will surely die.

Let us play the game of life for all there is in it. Let us see the whole show. To lose out in the first act and miss the best part would be the climax of folly.

The Established Church of England Inquiring Into Psychical Phenomena.

Great Encouragement to the Devotees of Spiritualism Comes from Every Source, Not the Least of Which Is From Science.

SPIRIT RETURN IS MAKING ADVANCEMENT ALL ALONG THE LINE—AS RAPIDLY OUTSIDE OUR RANKS AS IN THEM. NO ONE CAN PREVENT ITS ONWARD PROGRESS. IT IS DESTINED TO REVOLUTIONIZE THE WHOLE WORLD, DESTROYING ALL SHADES OF SECULARISM. NOW COMES ARCHDEACON COLLEY, OF ENGLAND, WITH AN AGKNOWLEDGMENT THAT SPIRIT RETURN IS A FIXED FACT IN THE ECONOMY OF NATURE.

Archdeacon Colley, rector of Stockton, near Rugby, will make a sensation at the Church Congress, at Weymouth, Eng., next month by moving the appointment of a committee representative of the Established Church to inquire into psychical phenomena, says the Daily Express of London, England.

Archdeacon Colley has embodied his Spiritualistic experiences of thirty-three years in an address, which is to be published in three languages, and which is based upon a diary in which he had recorded carefully various supernatural visitations.

"My object," said Archdeacon Colley in an interview with an "Express" representative, "is to explain what I hold strongly—that there is scientific proof of life beyond the grave.

"Religionists say that we want no proof, but I wish to show that it is a truth that does not depend upon belief, article or creed, but on proof positive—ocular, auditory, and tangible—that these spirit people of whom I speak have been seen, heard, and touched by me.

"I give dates for all the circumstances, and chapter and verse."

Facts in Support.

In one instance the archdeacon avers that he and four friends were sitting with a medium when the form of a little child was discerned on the medium's left.

The child was seen in the full gaslight, pursed her mouth to receive kisses, spoke, and, on the instructions of the medium, fetched articles from different parts of the room.

Eventually an ornament on the mantel-piece was indicated. As the little girl went forward the fire blazed up with scorching heat, and she drew back in alarm.

Involuntarily the archdeacon asked: "Did it burn you, my dear?" and the reply came back through the medium, "Yes, I felt it."

Another spirit form called into realization through the medium was that of an Egyptian. He was tall, walked about the room, and finally sat by the side of the archdeacon, who examined him through a Stanhope lens closely, observing the frontal ornament of the turban. As he passed his fingers over it, it seemed to melt away.

Altogether the Egyptian remained visible for an hour, and was induced under the influence of the medium to write on the back of Archdeacon Colley's card. For this a pencil was placed near him. The pencil was held at the same angle as a stylus, and the writing ran from right to left.

Coptic Writing.

Subsequently the card was forwarded to the authorities of the British Museum, and the writing was identified as Coptic. Fac-similes have been prepared, which the archdeacon will produce at the congress.

The archdeacon assigns the wedding which took place last July between his son, Lieutenant Colley, and an Irish girl to a recent visitation.

While paying a chance call in London, Lieutenant Colley was told that a lady wished to see him. He was confronted with a medium, a total stranger, who told him that the spirit of his dead mother wished to communicate with him. A message in a faint voice was dictated by the spirit through the medium, the meaning of which was beyond the lieutenant's comprehension.

Presently another and strange spirit spoke and delivered a message, which proved afterwards to concern a lady in Ireland.

Again the first spirit spoke, and intimated that the stranger was the mother of the lieutenant's future wife, and that his marriage had been arranged.

Quite skeptically the officer informed his father of his amazing experience, and the archdeacon understood the first message as a reference to in incident of his early married life.

Met His Bride.

Eventually, while delivering the message to the Irish lady, though still incredulous, the lieutenant became acquainted with the girl, who became his bride a little over two months ago.

During a pastoral visitation Archdeacon Colley came across an instance only a few days ago, in which a widow who was on her deathbed talked aloud for some time with her husband, whose spirit, she declared, was in the room.

"I do not believe in pressing these things before unbelievers," said the archdeacon, "because life is too short for controversy, and, as someone has said, controversy equalizes wise men and fools.

"What I have learnt I have learnt by experience and patient experiment, and by constant fasting. I have not been afraid to imperil my position by my assertions in favor of Spiritualistic beliefs.

"It has been borne in upon me that I ought to speak, and I shall not cease to claim that these manifestations should be received as being just as credible as Bible incidents, in which angels appeared to men. There are many things which must be left to the scientists rather than the church. I am ready to be cross-examined, and I want inquiry to be made."

Archdeacon Colley graduated at Magdalen College, Oxford, in 1869. He has been a curate at Coventry, morning lecturer at St. Anne's, Wandsworth, and has worked in Portsmouth.

He spent some years in Natal, and was appointed rector of Stockton in 1901.

WHAT IS LIFE?

The Question Tersely Answered by a Physician.

Life is a term with which we are familiar in its ordinary sense, but the fullness of its meaning is apt to stagger us. For life is everything!

Objections to such a definition are ready to hand, but can it not be proved true? Truth is frequently established by proofs that are largely speculative. When that eminent scientist, Sir Oliver Lodge, tells us that atoms are verifiable, which are so little that a million billions of them massed together are barely visible with the highest power of microscope, we accept the fact, although we feel that proof of it must be partly inferential. But what, in this connection, interests us most in Sir Oliver's tiny atoms is the fact that they are alive; they move—and move with a purpose. They build up other forms of being, just as they themselves are built up by and of the ultimate something we here term life.

But what reason have we to claim that the inherent activity of infinitesimal bits of substance is, properly, a phenomenon of life? We do so simply because life is the energized principle—the primary basis—the ultimate something of universal existence, whose incessant activity not only sustains its own being, but creates and sustains everything else that exists.

Hence life is eternal; these conditions of its existence prove that it could have had no beginning and can have no end. They also prove that life has intelligence that is inherent and supreme; none other could control its purposeful processes.

Therefore life is all-powerful and all-comprehensive; it is omniscient, omnipotent and omnipresent. But these are attributes which we can only ascribe to God himself, as the supreme ruler of the universe.

Therefore life is God and God is life.

And the dictum is true that man is created in the (intellectual) image of his maker; for he is apparently the superlative output of the constructive processes of life. For human life, as a specific determination and individuation of universal life, differs essentially from the lower forms in that it acquires consciousness of its existence and memory of its experience. These go to constitute human personality, which, as an uncomplicated condition of eternal life, can never be destroyed. Self-consciousness in any form of being that is strictly elementary could by no possibility be lost.

Man, therefore, is destined to live forever as a miniature reproduction and integral part of creative intelligence. In conclusion, we claim that here are facts that go to establish the truth of the definition that life is that intelligent creative energy whose activity accounts for universal existence. Life is everything.

SPIRIT RETURN.

Verily, It Comes to All, and Many Times No Medium Is Present—An Interesting Case.

To the Editor:—I see that my trial subscription has expired, and as I am getting interested, I will have to renew. I have been hunting for truth for the last fifteen years. I have had my experience in the Baptist church, and as I began to think for myself it had no use for me. I have been through Christian Science, and it looks as if a share of it was stolen from Spiritualism. The reason I sent for a trial subscription, my wife was doing her housework one morning (and was not thinking of her mother who had passed on several years ago), when she heard her mother's voice calling her, my wife being in a room with three walls hiding her from the road. She looked up and saw her mother sitting in the wagon as she used to come. She looked up and smiled and vanished. I have had my name called twice when none were around.

THE "GENERAL CONSCIENCE."

Some Interesting Particulars in Reference to the Same—The Church in Persecutions and Religious Bigotry—The Jesuits and their Nefarious Work.

To the Editor of The Sun:—A letter in The Sun of Sunday, July 16, in criticism of Mr. Goldwin Smith's question, "Where would even nominal Catholicity now be if political power had not in Italy, France, Spain, Austria, Bavaria and the Spanish Netherlands forcibly crushed freedom of inquiry?" contends that political power seldom attempted to crush freedom of inquiry in the interest of the Church herself; that it fought only to crush freedom of action.

In the individual man to will is to act; all before this is simply velleity, the lowest form of desire. Freedom of inquiry is not mere velleity; it implies action, not merely the right to think, but the right to speak, write and preach, not only for one, but for all. To say that Martin Luther was a mere inquirer and German Protestants were actors is to belittle the human mind.

Nearly all the massacres for 3,000 years have come from religious bigotry as the inciting cause, and when it comes to murdering a whole people for a difference of opinion concerning religion it matters not whether you call it political power or the Church, for State and Church all along have been one.

The Jews stoned the Prophets, the priests never interfering to prevent it. The Greeks put Socrates to death for teaching false doctrines. The Romans persecuted the Christians for denouncing false gods, and the Church, when she had obtained power, was never backward in crushing every inquiry.

Your correspondent said that in every country mentioned by Mr. Goldwin Smith the Church has been persecuted by the State. Now, the Church, in addition to her prerogative of locating the population of the next world either above or below, claimed the right to dominate the whole earth, to bestow scepters and kingdoms, to throne and dethrone, and what he calls the effort of the temporal power to enslave her was simply an effort in self-defense against her arrogant claims and persistent endeavors to grasp all power, temporal as well as spiritual. There is no instance in history where the Church was persecuted by the Christian State when she confined herself to her legitimate and proper business of saving souls.

It is true the Jesuits were expelled from Spain, France, Germany and every country in Europe, and why? Because in the language of the Roman Pontiff—of blessed memory—in the middle of the eighteenth century, who dissolved the order, "They taught false morals and encouraged the assassination of princes." But Jesuitism is not necessarily the Church.

Practically, there was no question of freedom of inquiry during the middle ages except in an academic way by some of the monks here and there. It was not till the fourteenth century, when Wycliff arose, that freedom of inquiry became a living issue. From that time every Catholic power in Europe at the instigation of the Church sprang to the work of crushing it. What but political power, or, to be more precise, as "H. F. L." would have it, what but the Church crushed freedom of inquiry in Moravia, exterminated the Hussites? What but the Church desolated Spain by driving into the sea the Moors, the hewers of wood and the drawers of water, the people who tilled the soil, who grew the rice and the corn while the lazy Spaniards were basking in the sun? What but the Church incited civil war in France, the Massacre of St. Bartholomew and the exile of millions of her best and most virtuous people? What but the Church ravaged all Germany with the horrors of war for thirty years, so that for 200 years she stood still, until Bismarck arose to consolidate her scattered energies and power?

Your correspondent says there is no such thing as the "general conscience," that conscience is exclusively and severely individual, that it is a process of the intellect. Conscience is the moral sense. It is the reason employed about questions of right or wrong, and accompanied with sentiments of approbation or condemnation. Reason is the intentional faculty or faculty of first principles as distinguished from the understanding, the discursive faculty. On it are based all the higher cognitive faculties that distinguish man from the brute. Its absence produces idiocy, its obscuration insanity. Without moral sense there can be no conscience. It comes not from the head. It springs spontaneously from one's moral nature, from the heart. It is a feeling, a sentiment, a concrete consciousness of right and wrong. The mind is the sum of subjective activities, ganglionic, nervous and muscular, focused in the brain. The understanding is the familiar and easy operation of the mind on what actually exists before it. The intellect is the mind engaged in the discovery of hidden and abstract truth.

It is very possible for one with a good understanding to have no intellect, and without intellect there can be no conscience if the latter is but a process of the former. This is but a logical deduction from the premise, but all experience teaches us that it is not true, that his premise is false. The "general conscience" of a people is the average conscience, just as the general honesty is the average honesty.

FUNDAMENTAL PHILOSOPHY.

BY HENRY MORRISON TEFFT.

There are no well defined lines in any department of life. Pride becomes haughtiness; humility carried to excess becomes weakness; diplomacy degenerates into duplicity; patriotism merges into ambition and taxation in time becomes confiscation.

Nothing remains stationary. The stars make their orbits; the sun and moon follow their circuits and all nature is involved in a cycle. Whatever has been will be again. This applies to all forms and customs. Discarded philosophies, religions and governments are not exempt from this universal rule.

To-day the trend of events, in church and state, is toward centralized power. Democracy, in my opinion, is only a passing phase in the history of civilizations and governmental life. Zangwill speaking of Emperor William's belief in the divine right of kings, says: "It may be that Europe will drift back again to his way of thinking. Reactions are not uncommon in history, and the agitations of anarchists and socialists may drive the world back to its monarchies and its kings by divine right."

Republican simplicity even in democratic governments is already a thing of the past. The great display attending the public appearance of rulers and the attention they demand makes them the target for envy, malice, and every sort of dissatisfaction. Greed, love of power and display has ruined every civilization, government or society that has heretofore existed. Wealth has no politics, no religion, no morals. Corporations have no souls. States nullify treaties, override international law and trample upon the rights and liberties of weaker peoples when the exigencies of the occasion demand.

A great railroad magnate once testified in a legal proceeding, when questioned in relation to his politics, that he was a republican in a republican county and a democrat in a democratic county. Kings sometimes vary their standard of morals and faith. Napoleon is quoted as saying: "In every country religion is useful to the government, and those who rule ought to avail themselves of it to govern mankind. I was a Mahometan in Egypt. In France I am a Catholic."

It is claimed that to have any influence in the affairs of life, one must keep in line with the tendencies of the times; if these are corrupt one cannot breast against them, if he does it is only to invite disaster. Civilization breeds more vices than barbarism. A man may be cruel but not vile; he may be ignorant but virtuous. Sin, gilded, sometimes bears the lustre of righteousness. It is no greater crime to kill a king than a peasant, but it strikes the servile mind of the populace with more force. The people always have been, always will be fooled, deceived, betrayed. They are fooled by party platforms, lulled to sleep by prohibitory laws, and coaxed into submission by promises of reform. The weaker the moral force of the government becomes the more stringent the laws, the more numerous the detectives and the stronger the police force has to be.

No ruler need be guarded among a people free, prosperous and happy. Where equal rights prevail there is safety. To men oppressed and trodden down, there first comes a sense of weakness, humiliation, and defect, then the feeling of desperation, revenge, and savagery. If the world knew how the public money was squandered, how, and for what purpose laws were made, offices multiplied, and salaries of officials raised,—every existing government to-day would stand in danger of being swept from the earth. The mouthing of patriotic words by politicians, the babbling of a servile and a subsidized press, are hollow and unmeaning pretensions in the eyes of an intelligent public.

The most false and delusive propositions become crystallized into statutes and finally accepted by the popular mind as fundamental truths. To argue that sin can be legalized and iniquity licensed is a denial of the moral order of the universe. The submission of the people to unjust laws, conditions, and burdens, has been the wonder of the ages. "But the endurance," says Froude, "of the inequalities of life by the poor is the marvel of human society. 'When the people complain,' said Mirabeau, 'the people are always right.'"

Equality is a leaven that is ever at work in the hearts of men. That condition is the ideal life and can only be obtained and kept by continual argument. "Each man," declares Emerson, "has an aptitude born with him to do easily some feat impossible to any other." The world's work demands all grades of talent. The scavenger prevents more diseases than the doctor. The doctor's province is to cure disease, not to exterminate it.

The vast majority of mankind view questions only on the surface; they see the running stream but never follow it to its source. There is no moral quality in a law. The criminal statute treats the crime, the offense, not the cause. All criminal legislation is superficial. It deals with effects, not with causes. There is nothing reformatory in a legislative act. No law-making power has ever been able to stamp out a single crime.

Tolstoy, the great Russian writer, opposes all force; he holds conscience to be above law and government. The public acts the part of critic on both general and private matters. They analyze, discuss and determine all questions,— and their decision is final. As physicians sometimes fail to properly diagnose the case of their patients, so the public often fail to locate the disease affecting the body politic.

If the root of a tree is unhealthy the whole body of it will sooner or later perish. When a man loses respect for himself he ceases to regard others. All punishment is degrading, humiliating, and destructive of that self-consideration which each individual should possess. "There is no reformation in degradation. Whoever is disgraced by society becomes its enemy. The seeds of malice are sown in his heart, and to the day of his death he will hate the hand that sowed the seeds. * * * If we are to change the conduct of men, we must change their conditions. Extreme poverty and crime go hand in hand."

The statutes of a country are the true indices to its civilization. Laws, religions, governments and gods, are all fashioned after the ideals of the people. The stream cannot rise higher than the source. Reforms commence in individual hearts, not in legislative assemblies. It is the outward manifestation, the show, not the substance, the results, not the causes, that attract attention. There is no sound in the thunder clap, there is no color in the sunset. The sound is in the ear. It is the intervening atmosphere that beautifies the evening sky. Color is nothing but reflected light.

"What we call the colors of an object is really the color of the light reflected from it. Sir Isaac Newton was the first to get a clear perception of this fact. Through his famous experiments with a prism he discovered what is now the most familiar of truths, that the white solar light is composite; that it is a mixture of the seven colors of the rainbow."

The social world, as well as the physical is largely made up of appearances. Very few generous acts are done without hope of recompense. Ambition is often more potent than money. Thousands would swap dollars for genius, worldly goods for fame and glory. A man may be a king in form, but a slave by nature. A title is an adornment to a small man, but detracts from the splendor of a large one.

It is said that Herbert Spencer refused the degree of LL. D. from both Cambridge and the University of St. Andrews, stating "that if the degree had been offered him when he was young and struggling it would probably have been of use to him, but he did not need it in his age." Genius needs no artificial aid. It is only cripples that walk with crutches. Already titles are so plenty that they have become a sign of "glorified mediocrity" rather than a badge of distinction. "So many statues in that Forum of yours, may it not be better if they ask, Where is Cato's Statue?"

"Society," says one writer, "is full of shams; fashion covers up the mental blanks. * * * The ingenuity of the modern man is constantly devising schemes for adding fictitious values to personalities which are morally and mentally worthless." Everything is veneered. The poor like to appear rich. Poverty is the unpardonable sin. No penance can atone for it; neither can fasting and prayer blot out the stain. The foolish look wise and the sinner virtuous. Hypocrisy clothes itself in the garb of religion, and ambition talks in the language of patriotism. But looking at the flag will not make a person patriotic, no more than praying will make a man pious. Sentiment, feeling, reverence lie deeper than all these. We are all creatures of education, and are continually growing in virtue or vice. If we violate the law of the land in minor matters it becomes easier for us to transgress those of stronger import. No act stands isolated and alone. Watered stock means watered morals, watered politics, watered religion. Society moves as a unit. If any member of the body is injured the whole system feels the shock. Each virtue practiced has its reward; each wrong committed its punishment. Every act done, good or bad, leaves a history. The moral quality of a man is what the people most admire. The king that oppresses in time will be condemned; no tyrant ever becomes a god. Warriors are glorified for their deeds of bravery and mercy, but not for those of revenge and hatred. Every life, unnecessarily taken in war is murder, all acts of cruelty barbarous, and detracts from the glory of the victors. "Babylon violated, diminishes Alexander; Rome enchained, diminishes Caesar; Jerusalem killed, diminishes Titus."

But there are conditions in society when order is tame and law inadequate; times when virtue is weak and justice demands the abrogation of rules, precedents and formulas. The English revolution which resulted in the Protectorate of Cromwell, and the French Revolution which caused the downfall of the king and the nobility, are striking examples. Moral, political, and religious upheavals cleanse society the same as great storms purify the air. A dead calm is more to be dreaded by sailors than a fierce storm.

As water finds its level so the disorders of governments and civil institutions finally become reconciled and law and order again assert their sovereignty over the people. "The burning sun may heat the sands of the desert until a simoon occurs after which, an equilibrium is restored." Agitation means purification. Freedom of thought, act, and speech are the bulwarks of liberty. Free and full discussion, act on the minds of men the same as a safety-valve on a steam boiler—it lets off the pressure.

No righteous cause ever suffers from publicity—Truth seeks the light,—error and falsehood darkness—silence. When a person is hired or forced to speak along a given line, what he says is valueless as a guide to human conduct. Though he may advocate the right measures, his words carry no conviction to the heart. A positive, truthful man, honest in his convictions, on the wrong side of a question, is more to be respected by community than a shifty, negative man on the right side. Each individual is either a protection or a menace to society—a help or a hindrance to the good order and well-being of community. "Every good man, with his small power and wisdom, prevents many evils—suspicions, slanders, hatreds, quarrels, frauds, diseases; in short, sins and sorrows of all names. He hails them while they are yet, as it were, in the offing, and successfully warns them off from the shores of being."

"I hold it true that Thoughts are Things—
Endowed with being, breath and wings,
And that we send them forth to fill
The world with good results or ill.

That which we call our 'secret thought'
Speeds to the earth's remotest spot
And leaves its blessings or its woes
Like tracks behind it, as it goes."

A man's life is stamped upon his countenance. We read the history in his form, in his words and in his acts. A freeman meets all persons alike, on equal terms and with open face; while the subject of tyrants stands abject before his superiors with averted look and downcast eye. The low born and depraved naturally associate together. People are at home only with those whom they can meet on common ground. Virtue and vice are antagonistic. Every person patterns after his ideal—whether that ideal is high or low and he daily grows into its likeness, in thought, action and looks. It is said of St. Francis of Assisi that by continually dwelling upon the terrible scene of the crucifixion there appeared on his body the scars and prints of the nails like unto those upon the body of the crucified Christ.

Each individual has a personality peculiarly its own; each nation a fixed type, and all civilizations have their distinctive determinate tendency and course; but neither as individuals or communities have we the making of our destinies. Everything is bound hard and fast under the grasp of irrevocable law. The past is a sure prophecy of the future. Even man himself, it is claimed by an eminent writer, is "the result" and not the cause of "historical forces."

"Look," he says, "at the individual at any time and in any country. Select the man from any situation whatsoever, and see whether he has determined even himself, to say nothing of the events of his epoch. Did he before his coming mark the time of his birth? Did he determine and choose his country? Did he reckon the conditions of climate and scene into which he should be thrown, and the consequent limitation of his powers? Did he fix his birthplace in river valley, on mountain slope, in populous city, or solitary steppe, in moaning forest, or by the beach of the infinite sea? Did any man ever choose his race and blood? Did he ever select his own paternity—his father, his mother, the physical and moral union of their lives in him? Did he ever make himself a Hindu, a Persian, a Greek, a fire-worshiper, a pagan, a Christian? Did any ever prepare beforehand to be a soldier, a poet, a priest? * * Could any be a Hun or a missionary, a Crusader or an Infidel, a prince or a boor, a fool or a philosopher, man or woman, slave or general, black, brown or white, strong or weak, blind or seeing, dwarf or herculean, capable or incapable of action or accomplishment? Has any man in any or country to any degree whatever influenced, not to say determined, the antecedent conditions of his own life and activities?"

History is written on the air. In the presence of the awful enigma of life reason abdicates her throne and conjecture stands speechless.

AN EARNEST ADMONITION.

Thoughts Which Are Applicable to Material and Spiritual Progress.

Revelations, chapter 17, represents the world's commerce arrayed in scarlet and as being boastful and proud. It is the modern Babylon corrupting kings and nations and causing all the miseries experienced by Earth's people.

It is also called the worldly ring which will or does make war with the Lamb, as stated in 14th verse, "and the Lamb shall overcome them; for he is the Lord of lords and King of kings;" and they that are with him are called the chosen and faithful.

The world has its ships of church and state. They cross and recross every ocean and sea under every sky. They ride proudly waving their banners, going forth into conflict for victory, but in these latter days there has been and is too much compromise with the worldly ring, that is, by the custodians of the Gospel proper, or ship of church who have joined the world in all her amusements and even her traffic, to enhance their external splendor and thus lose their power and right to gather in Earth's harvest grown from gospel seeding, etc.

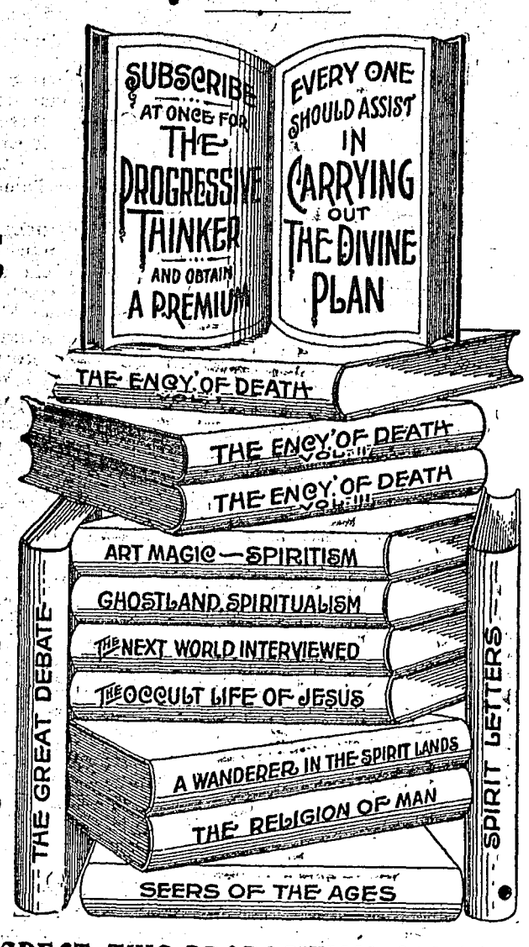
Ah, yes, the ministry is not working in accordance with God's word and will on its own lines, but has become tangled in all the glittering pursuits of the worldly ring as said. They do not welcome the revelations of this day and age which are God's aids sent to strengthen them and to uplift all people, and which revelations are the fulfillment of the promises given in what they call the Word of God; yet they do not receive them because their minds are darkened to these spiritual truths by reason of their worldly mingling as said; hence, not keeping pace with the spirit and progress of the age. This grand old ship will be differently manned and the captains controlling her precious cargo will be superseded by others who are attuned to the harmonies of nature and the voice of God as it speaks in myriad ways to humanity in these days.

Learn, O ye people, and ye leaders of the people, that truth is not to be discarded; that truth is eternal, but the errors which have been heaped upon her and crushed her to Earth must be removed and cast into oblivion, that she may shine forth in her purity and be felt in her power. Yea; the power and glory of truth and harmony are what is needed to lift mankind above their submerged conditions of vice and selfishness.

When the Word of God is divested of all man-annexed errors, the people will see its beauty and gladly accept it and work harmoniously together in accordance with their mental and spiritual unfoldment and gradations. This is God's will and man's duty, from which good only can result.

It is required of religious leaders that they acquaint themselves with nature's principles and active forces, for the reason that in times past the Word was for the most part given in symbols indicating its varied relations. Since all gospel that can in truth be termed everlasting must coincide with nature's principles and science, and be so understood that it can have its scientific demonstration when nature's and man's unfoldment make such demonstration possible.

The time is near at hand when this can and will be done. The true teachers of the word must therefore also be true scientists and in consequence thereof healers of the minds and bodies of mankind. They must lead in thought and others follow in the actual physical demonstrations.



The true gospel ministers of to-day should be able to show to the world their at-one-ment in thought and action with God and nature; show this by pointing out how nature's forces can be tamed to render service to man, instead of being destructive; to show to the world the superabundance of electricity stored in nature's vaults below Earth's surface and in the dome of the skies, as well as the super-abundant oils, gases and coal need to be and must be brought forth for man's use, not only for his comfort in many ways, but that it is also necessary because the stability of the central system depends upon relieving the congested condition caused by these accumulations from nature's constant activities which produce more than the world system proper needs for its maintenance.

Our admonition there is: Apply your minds unto wisdom and these truths, to teach them and bring them forth in works as indicated.

SUPER-PHYSICAL MEANS

Brought Into Requisition in the Curing of Disease—Some Suggestions Worthy of Consideration

It is possible to cure disease by super-physical means; that there is some truth in the assertion of the students of hypnotic therapeutics, mesmerism and mental healing, can no longer be doubted by anyone who investigates these phenomena without prejudice and with a sincere desire to get at the facts.

As in our inquiry into other phenomena that elude the physical senses and require for their scientific examination the use of our super-physical or clairvoyant vision, such as the survival of the soul after death and its return to earth-life in accordance with the principle of reincarnation, we have found the coherent and reasonable explanation of the theosophical system, so in this matter of healing, we shall obtain, from the investigations of theosophical students, a complete and common-sense exposition of the rationale of healing, of its dangers and abuses, and of the qualifications which one must possess before he may safely use these higher forces.

The more intelligent students of hypnotic therapeutics are coming to realize that they must return to the teachings of Mesmer, the great physician who wrought such wonderful cures in the middle of the eighteenth century, for a fuller understanding of these finer forces, for they are beginning to recognize that it is dangerous to use the hypnotic trance and that far more effective work can be done without it. Mesmerism, or animal magnetism, is that treatment which means the vital magnetic fluid which courses through every human and animal body. The strong and healthy man possesses much of it, the weak and sickly man very little, and it is by transferring some of his surplus vitality, by the use of will power, that the mesmerist, or healer, removes disease and brings about health. The effectiveness of a healer depends upon the strength and purity of his body, and also very largely on the purity of his moral and spiritual nature. It is believed that Christ wrought his cures in this manner.

Mental or divine healing is thoroughly grasped when one realizes that thoughts are real things and that they definitely influence people for good or evil. It is interesting to note that thought-forms have actually been photographed by Dr. Baraduc of Paris. Thoughts of health and strength, when generated by a sick person himself, or when sent from a healthy person to a sick one, will assuredly accomplish some good. What their effect will be depends upon the physical, mental and spiritual power of the persons involved. That many wonderful cures have been wrought in this way is evidenced by the literature of Christian Science.

Now that this method of treating disease is spreading so rapidly, it is very important that every person understand something about it, about its dangers and its abuse, so that no healer may have opportunity to practice in serious cases unless he has absolutely proved his competency by success in many other cases. We must ever be on guard against these foolish and dangerous people who think that the mere reading of a few books makes them competent to heal disease. No more would the reading of a book on swimming make one able to swim. Common sense is the keynote to this whole matter of healing, and we must vigorously protest when there is any deviation from it.

Besides a knowledge of the laws that underlie those things, we must insist on good, strong, pure character, so that these higher forces may not be used selfishly and harmfully. They are entirely safe only when they are exercised for the benefit of others and not in one's own interests, and this is the standard that we should ever have in mind.

That is why theosophists devote themselves to living a right life and helping their fellow-men, for they realize that the development of a perfect character is the object of evolution, and that these higher faculties, which are latent in everyone, will come to them in the natural course of events.

FINDS SOLACE IN MUSIC.

His Wife Dead and Young Daughter Dying, John Creny, Left Alone in the World, Says Harmony Is a Voice That Carries His Thought on High.

Out of a darkened room at 2033 West Twenty-second street floated last night the melancholy strains of "Mary in Heaven," played on the violin. The notes died away to be followed a moment later by the deep vibrations of a 'cello, then the violin again and later the plaintive pleadings of a brass instrument.

It was John Creny consoling himself with his music for the loss of his wife and little daughter, the latter dying in the hospital.

"Music is like another voice to me," he said in broken English. "My wife is gone. My child is dying. I shall be all alone. Do you play the piano? Come and accompany me. Gently, gently. Music is a voice that carries my thoughts up there—to her."

Other players there may be who have greater art than this simple German. But none have ever put more feeling into his music or was more exalted in the performance than John Creny in that humble but lonely home last night, telling his sorrows to his well loved instruments.

"They understand, they understand," he half sobbed, stroking the 'cello softly.

Two weeks ago John Creny's wife died. Last Friday his little daughter suffered an accident and yesterday they told him she could not live. He is alone in the world, with his instruments that used to make bread for the family and are now his only solace.—Chicago Examiner.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32. CHICAGO, ILL., OCT. 28, 1905. NO. 831

Religion of Japan

A Comprehensive View of the Same.

Everything pertaining to Japan, its people, their customs, and especially their religious cults, is of special interest at the present time, because of recent events in the far East. More especially is it of interest to Spiritualists, because of the element of Spiritualism infused in the religion of Japan.

The study of religions is very interesting, and not among the least interesting is the ancient religion of Japan, known as Shintoism. A writer in the New York Herald calls it "a mild, negative sort of Spiritualism."

The question might well be raised: Are not all forms and phases of religion founded on, and did they not have their origin and basis in, Spiritualism?

A belief in spirit beings, their presence and power, has apparently been coeval with the human race, and from this initial point have arisen all the varied religious ideas, rites and cults that pertain to religious development and history.

Nor can it be doubted that from the earliest period of man's existence, apparitions of spirits of the departed have been known, and thus have afforded a basis for the origin and prevalence of primitive religious cults and beliefs.

As stated in a very interesting and instructive article in the New York Herald, were Japan shorn of her temples she would lose half her beauty and charm. They are heathen temples, if you will, but they are at the same time visible exponents of a widespread and deep rooted religious feeling. Wholly apart from their ethical significance, however, the buildings themselves are often exquisite monuments of the best of Oriental architecture, and the simplest of them add to the fascination of the wooded hillside or the city street.

Visiting temples form the major part of the tourists' sightseeing in Japan; yet most people come away with the vaguest sort of idea of the religions to which these places of worship are dedicated. This is not to be wondered at, for the state of the religions of Japan to-day is a curious one, and many of the Japanese themselves, were they forced to answer questions, would show ideas just as vague. Though the empire has three Oriental religions—Shintoism, Buddhism and Confucianism—they have for hundreds of years been so mixed together that they do not stand distinct in the minds of the common people.

The real, old native religion of Japan Shintoism. It has come down to the present day from prehistoric times, and has/haps, the simplest religion in the world, not only in its doctrines and bull demands but also in its ceremonial Shintoism is, more than anything else, a mild, negative sort of Spiritualism. The first temples were erected to the heroic beings of Japanese mythology, but since then the Japanese have been steadily manufacturing gods at such a rate that to-day one may visit a temple dedicated to all of the "eight million gods of Shinto."

In the West, if a man has distinguished himself in war or politics, becomes a great philanthropist or a public benefactor, we honor his memory after death by erecting a more or less hideous representation of him in bronze in a public square. In Japan they build him a temple and make him a god, the size of his shrine being in proportion to his greatness when living.

Again, if a rich man wishes to honor one or more of his forebears, he builds one of these houses, in which the departed spirit may live and the public may come to worship it. From a Japanese point of view a memorial tablet in one of our churches or universities might be a Shinto shrine, and Grant's tomb a beautiful temple for his spirit.

Once the temple is built the simple people think that the newly made god sits benignly behind the lattice door which is closed before the inner sanctuary and listens to their supplications. Here are tied many fluttering prayers, which are written on white paper, and the straw mat in front is covered by a sprinkling of copper "rin," cast there as offerings by the devout.

Shinto priests are not obliged to give their lives up to their religion, nor to live lives of celibacy and asceticism, as the Buddhists are supposed to do. The office is usually hereditary, and is little more than an honor. The title of the priest is "Guardian of the God;" he may marry and be engaged in business, his connection with the temple being active only at the time of some great festival, when he and his brother priests exorcise the god, and induce him, after much chanting and appropriate ceremonies, to issue from the temple and enter a closed bull cart, in which he is paraded about the streets in the midst of a long and interesting procession of men and girls in costume.

In a beautiful Shinto temple in the outskirts of the ancient city of Kioto there is a tiny square patch of ground near the main shrine, enclosed by a little fence of barbed wire. Here, the custodian of the temple will tell you, the august godship condescends to sit once a year while his sanctuary undergoes a process of housecleaning! You will then have your attention called to some bushes growing in this sacred spot, within the barbed wire. Though they are of several varieties, the leaves of all have developed prickly edges set with thorns. Every shrub planted here begins to grow in this way, the custodian solemnly tells you, and it certainly seems to be the truth.

This apparent miracle may be classed with another which occurs yearly in Tokio in connection with Shinto, and which no western person has yet been able to explain. It is the famous "Hai Wattaral," or fire walking, at which both priests and people walk repeatedly back and forth over a bed of live, glowing coals. The priests fast and pray for some time before this ceremony, according to Buddhist ideas, but the common people, who pass over the fire in the same miraculous way, have no preparation.

Before the restoration of the Mikado to his full rights in 1868, and the consequent metamorphosis of Japan, it would havqe been well nigh impossible to discover in Shintoism a separate religious system, for Buddhism and Shintoism were thoroughly mixed together. By imperial decree the two religions were suddenly separated, for it was decided that Shinto should be the court religion as it had been in ancient days; therefore a system of "purification" was inaugurated, and the Shinto temples purged of all that pertained to Buddhism.

Interesting as Shinto is, it has not a hundredth part of the outward picturesqueness of Buddhism. This latter religion was brought over from Corea in the sixth century in a very pure form, and its priests, instead of bitterly opposing the national Shinto, carefully grafted the one to the other. The Buddhist priests show ingenuity in putting Shinto gods on the Buddhist calendar of saints, and in reconciling the Shinto mythology with the Buddhist legends, and so the two religions jogged fraternally along together.

The great Buddhist temples, those which every day are visited by hundreds of worshipers, have large monasteries attached, in which the priests dedicated to its service live, generally presided over by an abbot. Services will be continued at intervals, or continuously throughout the day, the priests relieving each other. The ceremonial differs with the various sects, but in general it consists in the beating of deep-toned musical bells, set about in the sanctuary before the altar, the bowing and numberless genuflections of the officiating priests, the copious burning of incense, and the weird chanting of certain prayers, many of which are repeated over and over again, with a strange rising and falling cadence.

The words are of old Sanscrit forms, and in many cases the meaning is entirely lost. No person can visit one of the great Buddhist temples of Japan while a service is in progress without being deeply impressed by the strange scene and stranger sounds.

The clouds of rich incense make the senses stagger; the weird dronings and movements of gorgeously vested priests and the regular intonations of the bell are a combination which awes the foreign visitor and gives him a new idea of the religious feeling of the East.

Then he may turn and see outside the altar rail a small gathering of worshipers, men and women of the common people, with their babies on their backs; old, tottering pilgrims in their white and dust-stained clothes, kneeling reverently, their palms pressed together, murmuring to themselves their words of devotion.

The Japanese religious pilgrims are among the most interesting figures of religious Japan. You may meet them anywhere in the empire, dressed in the distinctive white dress, and carrying a bowl in which they place the alms for which they beg. You may see infirm old people who are traveling hundreds of miles to visit some famous shrine before they die, and gain great virtue by their act.

The higher significance of Japanese Buddhism is lost to the visitor, just as it is to the majority of Japanese. It would be unjust to speak of Buddhism in the empire without admitting that there are still some great teachers of its highest esoteric forms who transmit their knowledge and experience to only a few.

Confucianism, the third and last of Japan's religious systems, has never been to the Japanese what it is to the Chinese. Its teachings have widely influenced Japanese thought and social customs, but more as a philosophical system of ethics than as a new religion. It has had an especially strong influence on the upper class Japanese, and accounts very largely for their agnosticism, proving, therefore, one of the chief obstacles of the Christian missionaries.

WHEN I AM DEAD.

When I am dead thou'lt come, beloved,
with slow
Sad feet unto my final resting-place.
But I would ask, let not thy tears fall low
Upon my passionless, unheeding face,
When I am dead.

And fold me not with words of sorrow wild,
With love and longing to thy anguished breast;
God has but beckoned home His weary child;
Say then, "He giveth His beloved rest,"
When I am dead.

Kneel down beside me; touch my icy brow
With the warm lips of love, but shed
no tears,
And see with gladness, not with sorrow,
how
Has been removed the burden of my years,
When I am dead.

Think not how sweet the joys that might have been,
The future blooming brightly at our feet,
But say, "From out the paths of trial and sin
The merciful Lord hath taken thee, my sweet,
For thou art dead."

Fold still my hands with spray of heliotrope Between my listless fingers; let its breath
Live in thy heart, a messenger of hope,
Of life and love beyond the shores of death,
When I am dead.

Think I am happy where no time or tide
Of woe, and misery, and human fears,
Can whelm the soul. Think of a heaven-born bride
Who waits for thee beyond, and shed
no tears
When I am dead.

LETTER FROM JUDGE A. MUNSON.

In Which He Expresses His High Opinion of the Premium Books Issued by The Progressive Thinker.

To the Editor:—Three years ago I wrote and suggested to you the propriety of publishing the Petersilea letters through that renowned medium, Carlyle Petersilea in book form for a premium for The Progressive Thinker. I have no doubt this suggestion came to you long before I mailed my suggestion to you.

I have received and read the Spirit Letters premium book with a deep interest, although I had most all of these letters as they were from time to time published in the columns of The Progressive Thinker.

I have read all of the premium books published by The Progressive Thinker, and while they are all good and filled with great truths, in my way of thinking and appreciation, this one leads the procession of the famous band of pioneers that you have published and sent out to the world at a mere NOMINAL COST to enlighten, instruct and educate the world in the higher realms of psychic thought and spiritual unfoldment.

Allow me to again suggest that there are other letters that have been published in The Progressive Thinker, among them the Beecher letters and spirit letters of Harriet Beecher Stowe, and spirit letters through Amelia Petersilea, all of which, if combined in a separate premium volume, would be greatly enjoyed by the reading world and more surely attract the public mind to higher realms of thought in the line of spiritual unfoldment.

Last July I took a short trip West and brought up for a week's stay at South Bend, Ind. I soon discovered that it was a city of churches, with the celebrated Notre Dame and St. Mary's colleges only two miles away, and I wondered if in this maze of churches upon the right and left I should find any liberalists and Spiritualists, and to my delightful surprise the first stranger with whom I became acquainted, I found an outspoken Spiritualist, and also a celebrated magnetic healer in the person of Dr. E. H. Denslow at 112 West Wayne street, South Bend, Ind. The Doctor is of Quaker extraction, in perfect health, physically strong as well as mentally, and has a fine magnetic temperament, and his whole system is infused with, and surrounded by, a strong vital and magnetic aura. With the proper surroundings and given plenty to do in the healing line he would soon forge to the front and become one of the first healers of the country. I predict for the Doctor a bright future with the forces with which nature has so richly him endowed as a strong magnetic healer.

MATERIALIZATION.

Considered and Analyzed From the Standpoint of a Prominent Medium.

When Michael Faraday, the great pioneer in electrical science of this age, was asked as to the nature of electricity, he answered: "Perhaps I know as much as anyone about the subject, and I confess I know nothing whatever as to its true nature."

As the writer who has given his ideas regarding the spiritual and material relations of life to the world since his transition, perhaps I know as much as anyone as to the nature of the materialization phenomena which was first made public through the Eddy Brothers of Chittenden, Vt. and also Mrs. Andrews, of Moravia, N. Y.

I have never thought it to be essential to the Spiritualistic public that I should make known the results of experiments controlled by the scientific spiritual world in this line, as the Spiritualists who are most prominent in the movement have never expressed any desire to have such a line of work conducted under scientific auspices.

But the time may be ripe, now for this knowledge to be given to the world as it seems that the foundations of proof of a demonstrative order are being shaken BY THE FAKE PHENOMENA THAT HAVE ARISEN TO COUNTERFEIT THE GENUINE.

Materialization is the work of spirit chemists and electricians and cannot be given by the spirits without them, or accurately counterfeited by mortals.

There is no more resemblance between a fake performance and the genuine phenomena than there is between a silver dollar and a brass medal.

I have seen both, and know the difference, but THE AVERAGE SPIRITUALIST IS TOO IGNORANT AND OFTEN TOO CREDULOUS TO UNDERSTAND EITHER. In fact the object of the spiritual movement seems to be almost lost sight of in the attempt to commercialize the phenomena or place it on the same footing as other lines of business.

Paying the medium for his time may not be objectionable, but expecting that the spirits will come at the call of the medium or mortals for the dollar is where the whole fabric is rotten.

The medium has no power over the spirits whatever. The sitter has no inducement of a pecuniary nature that weighs a grain with spiritual forces behind the medium that give the phenomena. This may be accepted as an inviolable spiritual law.

If, therefore, there is to be any hope of success, arrangement for circles for this phenomena must conform to it; that is, ascertain what conditions are necessary on the part of the circle that will meet the approval of the spirits who do the work. Some people cannot sit in these circles at all, therefore count them out in advance. Others can, provided the guides approve of them. Of them, let the circle be organized. Let all directions given by the guides be carefully observed as to time and place of meeting.

If possible, let the motive power of thought be truth in general rather than to have some particular friend or friends appear. This brings the strong powers of the scientists to assist the less developed spirits to manifest.

Whatever phenomena happens (and it is very likely to vary with each circle) do not discuss it then, but study it at leisure. EACH CIRCLE IS REALLY AN EXPERIMENT CIRCLE, WITH NEW PHENOMENA PRESENTED OR ATTEMPTED BY THE GUIDES.

These principles if adopted will call out truthful guides as assistants; if rejected, "FAKE" GUIDES (FOR THERE ARE SUCH) WILL HAVE THE RIGHT OF WAY WITH MEDIUM AND CIRCLE BOTH.

Finally, let me say that phenomenal proof of this order as well as of other scientific lines, is not given to bolster up Spiritualism or any other ism. It is given to demonstrate the power of the spirit over matter in the lower vibrations of visibility. Once given it does not need continuous repetition to prove its truth, although it might have many appearances in the different ages.

AT PRESENT THE OUTLOOK FOR THE MODERN SPIRITUAL MOVEMENT IS NOT PROPITIOUS FROM A SCIENTIFIC STANDPOINT. It has gone into commercialism to such an extent as to have practically CLOSED THE AVENUES OF THE GENUINE AND OPENED THE GATES WIDE TO "FAKE" EVIDENCE.

Nevertheless such is the power resident in spirit that if the doors to communication should be closed for a thousand years, they could be opened again as easily as they were in 1848.

Neither are the old workers in the cause of such importance that the spirit world could not do without them. More evidence of a scientific character that will stand the test of ages has been given through W. W. Aber than through all other sources. Yet Mr. Aber has never asked for recognition as a worker outside his own house.

When the law of vibrations was first given to the world it was written in an old farm house up near Vermont, and it took seven years after publication for it to reach the "spirit guides" of the old workers, and then only after Charles Dawbarn had made it the foundation of his lecture on that line. Therefore your correspondent is inclined to think that those who imagine that the world spiritual rests upon their shoulders, or that the "fakes" are liable to swamp the movement with their bogus phenomena, may rest easy for a season. Perhaps it might be about as well if the whole public movement should subside for a generation, and deep study take the place of mountebank performances in the name of Spiritualism. It might save the necessity of such frantic appeals to save the movement from its advocates.

GUARDIANSHIP.

The loving ones of spheres above,
Who aid us in our works of love,
Are often near us in our strife,
Within this mortal sphere of life.

The dear friends who have gone before,
Who think of us forevermore,
Are in the realms of life sublime,
Where thoughts flow in most perfect rhyme.

With outstretched hands from purest light,
Descend the higher ones, from bright
Celestial shores to earth below,
To mortals some good deeds bestow.

With always a pure loving thought,
The higher ones from light are brought,
To tell the denizens of earth,
The real truths from the higher birth.

NATURE OF EVOLUTION.

A Chapter Out of the Book of Nature.

In the Science of Species there are features not recognized from the moral point of view, for there is a moral sense in all kingdoms of Nature, it being a fundamental principle inhering in all that is, else man would not have developed it.

It is that quality of mind that discerns between the right way and the wrong way, defines use and perseveres in evolving a better and still better state of being. The long lines of evolution betray this sensing in mineral, vegtable and the animal kingdoms, it is the perception of utility, and until man fully recognizes this he will not grasp the secret of evolution, or reaching upward for betterment. Were this statement not true, no plant would seize upon the least element placed in its way by which it can improve itself.

The beauty of the flower produces a vibration in the beholder which is called a recognition of the charm, either in form, color or fragrance. This recognition is by the soul elements in the human of a cognate principle in the flower, it is the "answering of deep unto deep" and is felt as readily in the flower, though not as fully as by the human.

The human is but an evolved animal, the animal is but an evolution of the vegetable and the vegetable has come up through ages from the mineral, and all has come to be through the inhering central forces of being.

Chemical forces are but thought elements, and these inhere in all electrons, varying according to utility.

"All that is ever was" is an axiom of exact truth.

All the chemicals of today have always existed; all creation has come to be through chemical action by selection. Time has produced nothing new; change of form depends upon chemical relation, and in every change there is a moral activity, hence the "survival of the fittest."

The loss of species or a genus is Nature's proof that it is no more needed, and that its elements can be used for higher purpose in some other form. To this law belongs all the orders of Nature, they are amenable to it and can never depart from it.

The general trend of man is not to extinction, but to improvement, the species of the genus mingling toward betterment.

Not one species has ceased entirely, the blood of two peoples of the earth, extinct as races, is still to be found mingled with that of other races, working for the betterment wherever found.

The genus homo has a place upon every self-developed planet, "to dress it and to keep it." The story of the Garden of Eden, in its truth and beauty is the story of every improved planet, and when the sensitive is found who can transmit the Genesis of this planet then its inhabitants, both earthly and ethereal, shall know how it came to be, the ages it has taken for its work and how other planets have passed through their evolutions to states of dissolution, when their elements, attracted hither and thither, enter into the combinations of other planets, carrying with them their evolved purities, sensibilities and activities for further betterment in use.

TRICKS OF THE SENSES

Be Sure You Are Right and Then Go Ahead, but Always Look Out for the Trick of the Senses.

Everyone is familiar with and most people are prepared to trust, the popular affirmation, "I must believe my senses." Dr. Andrew Wilson, however, in the pages of Chambers' Jourarnl, reviews the numerous instances in which it is anything but safe to put one's whole confidence in these "gateways of knowledge."

Most of us know all about the illusion produced by placing a pea between the middle and fore fingers and then crossing them, and in this way reversing the finger surfaces which are in contact with the pea. With the eyes blindfolded one is practically certain, under these conditions, of the transtransformation of the one pea into two.

In the same way, by crossing your fingers and passing them over the tip of your nose, you may experience, in the possession of two nasal organs, an even greater discomfiture that that which haunted Cyrano de Bergerac.

The strange tricks that the sense of touch is apt to play upon the most wary are, Dr. Wilson points out, particularly appreciable in surgery. It is well known that when a man has had his leg amputated below the knee, for example, he will experience pain not in the stump, but in the toes of the missing foot.

An American patient once observed to a doctor, "If I should say I am more sure of the leg which isn't than the one which is, I guess I should be about correct."

In the same way, when a patient has had a defective nose put to rights by the transformation of a flap of skin from the forehead—the flap in this case taking root, as it were, in its new quarters, the patient experiences the sensation of having his forehead touched when it is his nose that is being tickled.

The reason for this, as Dr. Wilson explains, is that it takes a certain time for the brain to get used to discriminating between mental messages coming from unaccustomed sources and the old impressions which the nerves, now misplaced, were in the habit of conveying to it.

The sense of sight, as is well known, is responsible for endless illusions. Dr. Wilson examines the familiar one of a person in a picture following you about the room with his eyes, and points out that the illusion does not arise from the eye alone:

"The brain plays a certain part here in assisting the deception, as Sir David Browster long ago demonstrated. The painting is, of course, done upon a flat surface, and presents to the eye of the spectator a front view of the object only, and this in whatever position he may stand. The eye of a real person, on the other hand, is thrown into relief. If we move to one side we see the side of the eyeballs and miss seeing as much of the pupil as when the eye is kept steadily to the front. But as we gaze on the picture we are presented from any point of view with all the elements of the eye regarded from the brain, and the brain simply translates this continuous front view into the illusion of the moving eye."

The brain fails to make allowance for the fact that the picture is flat, and that it presents the spectator a persistent front view.

MUST WORK AS WELL AS PRAY.

Hark! I hear the voice of angels
Calling to me night and day:
Up and doing, do not falter,
Do not loiter on the way.
Lend a hand to those around you,
Hasten, help us, don't delay;
Listen to the voice of warning,
You must work as well as pray.

Go and tell the blessed story,
There's no death along life's way;
Angel hosts to earth are coming
Building stronger day by day,
Golden links that are immortal,
That will last eternally.
Lo! the angel world is with you,
You must work as well as pray.

All along throughout life's journey,
Duty calls you every day;
Angel helpers ever near you
Tell you what to do and say.
All the beauty and the grandeur,
Lying all along life's way;
Be in earnest, we are with you,
You must work as well as pray.

Some are planting, others reaping
Golden grains of truth each day;
Others idly stand and loiter
While life's moments slip away.
All must surely see the harvest
Needs more workers every day;
Be no shirker, do your duty,
You must work as well as pray.

Earthly leaders that are blinded,
Think all others go astray;
See! mankind is so downtrodden
That they know not what to say,
Feed the hungry, clothe the naked,
We will open up the way;
Heal the sick and raise the fallen,
You must work as well as pray.

See! earth's children grope in darkness,
Many fainting by the way,
Many mourning for their loved ones
Whom they think death stole away.
Tell them that there is no dying;
That their loved ones live alway.
Soothe their sorrow, hush their crying,
You must work as well as pray.

Listen to the spirit voices,
Hear the words that they would say,
Freely give to all the message
From the loved ones, without pay.
Each one's life is like a garden;
As they sow, they'll reap some day;
Plant the seeds of truth in kindness,
You must work as well as pray.

Hear the angels' voices ringing
Over all the earth to-day;
Having brought to earth this message,
They will surely point the way
Into life that is unending,
Into light of endless day;
Into that eternal city,
Where the holy angels stay.

The Good and the Bad.

They Are Always With the Mortals of Earth.

Always bear in mind that life is made up of sunshine and clouds; of the good and the bad; of cheerfulness and sadness; and occasionally Spirit Return is manifested in a way that casts a shadow over our Cause. Don't forget this: The Good and the Bad are always with us; choose which you will serve.

A STRANGE DEFENSE.

A Boy Murders His Father, Saying, "My Brother's Spirit Ordered It."

Whether it was a case of spirit control, or insanity which caused the murder, no one at present knows. Whatever the cause, it affords a psychological study for Spiritualists everywhere. The New York Daily World sends the following forth to its millions of readers, and in order that our subscribers can keep thoroughly posted as to what is going on in our ranks, we publish the same:

The deliberate murder of Edgar Uhl by his son, at the instigation of the victim's wife, has brought to light a remarkable story of the influence of "spirits" on the actions of the Uhl family. Not only was the murder of the elder Uhl directly traceable to this influence, but the belief that the order to slay his parent came from "spirits" has enabled the murderer to smile at the contemplation of his deed, though it has driven his mother insane.

Another child of the murdered man, a deaf mute girl, is also under the control of the "spirits," and believes that her brother did only what was right in killing his parent. Confronted by such conditions, the legal authorities face a peculiar state of affairs, and the approaching trial of the murderous son promises to be a remarkable one.

The Uhl family has long been well known in Marietta, Ohio, where the father conducted a prosperous hotel bearing his name. Mrs. Uhl, who, as Ida Kennard, married him twenty-three years ago, was well liked, and her three children, Brady, Edgar and Cora, never gave any evidences of mental peculiarity. Cora, however, has been a deaf-mute from infancy, so that little has been seen of her, though she is a very pretty girl, who would otherwise have been something of a belle.

Son's Death the First Cause.

The Uhl family was, to all appearances, the usual one of a family, until two years ago, when the son Brady, who had gone to Pittsburg to gain the experience necessary to a business career in which his father promised to start him, was killed in an elevator accident.

Brady was his mother's favorite son, and his death preyed on her mind to such an extent that she was made seriously ill.

On her recovery she began to pay frequent visits to Pittsburg, and in a short time it was discovered by her husband that she had become an ardent devotee of Spiritualism, in which she sought solace from her grief, hoping to find a way, as the mediums promised her, of communicating with the spirit of her dead son. Mr. Uhl, growing worried over his wife's attention to Spiritualism, sent his son Edgar on one of her visits to Pittsburg, but to his surprise the son returned even more of a devotee to the belief than was his mother.

From that time on the intensity of their ardor increased, and the son grew to be so enthusiastic in his belief that he persuaded his mother to have one room in the Uhl Hotel in Marietta fitted up as a shrine, or seance chamber, where meetings under the auspices of mediums from various parts of the country were held frequently.

A Death Prophecy Fulfilled.

Finally, about a year ago, something happened which changed the calmness of the mother's and son's belief into a frenzy. A medium told them at one of their seances that the father of Mr. Uhl was about to die suddenly. Mr. Uhl laughed at them, but a week later his father who had never been ill, was taken with a fatal attack while riding in a street car, and died a few hours later.

This confirmation of the medium's prophecy drove Mrs. Uhl and Edgar into a paroxysm of enthusiasm, which they communicated to the deaf-mute daughter, Cora. From that day on they did little but commune with the "spirits," spending a great deal of money to secure "manifestations" by unscrupulous mediums, who found them easy prey. From the mysterious chamber in the hotel came, at all hours of the day and night, the blowing of trumpets, the beating of tambourines and the uncanny cries and moans with which the mediums sought to impress their willing victims. Mr. Uhl was impervious to the entreaties of his wife and children that he join them in their devotions. And they were deaf to his pleadings to put the mediums out of the house and to abandon what he persisted in calling their folly.

The presence of the mediums and their effect on his wife and children finally became so unpleasant to Mr. Uhl that he tried to rid the place of them. Seeing that their good name would soon be over unless Mr. Uhl could be made to leave them alone, the mediums, it is alleged, worked on Mrs. Uhl and her son Edgar until they were convinced that it was their duty to kill him.

According to Mrs. Uhl, the order to murder her husband came to them while they were holding communication with the spirit of Brady, the son who had been killed in Pittsburg.

"Brady had appeared to us," said Mrs. Uhl, "and was telling Eddie and me how happy he was in heaven. Suddenly he said:

"'But I would be happier if my father were with me. You must kill my father at once, as he must not remain in the world. His spirit is wanted here, and you are commanded to kill him, kill him, kill him, kill him!'"

Immediately on receiving the "message," Mrs. Uhl and her son set about obeying its commands. It never occurred to them to tell any one else of what they had been told to do; if they had, Mr. Uhl would have been warned. The mother and son kept their secret to themselves, and the husband and father noticed nothing unusual in their actions.

The Murder of the Father.

The message was received on April 24, but so well did the misguided mother and son guard their secret that it was not until the middle of June that they gave anyone an inkling of what they intended to do. About June 20 they confided to Cora that her father was about to die and that if she wished to say good-by to him she had better be doing it, or the opportunity would be gone. Whether Cora understood that her mother and brother were going to kill her father, or believed that their communication dealt simply with a belief that he would be removed by some supernatural power, no one has yet been able to learn. At any rate, Cora said nothing to Mr. Uhl of what her mother had told her, and the man was not on his guard.

Mrs. Uhl and Edgar, it was decided between them, would kill Mr. Uhl on the morning of June 28. Why they selected that particular day no one knows. Probably in the ratiocinations of their disordered minds the date suggested itself, and they accepted it as fixed by their controlling "spirits."

On the morning of June 28, Mrs. Uhl and Edgar went to room No. 18 in the Hotel Uhl, which is the chamber in which they had their Spiritualistic "layout." Edgar had procured a shotgun with which to kill his father, and awaited him in this room. Word was sent to Mr. Uhl that his wife and son wished to see him, but he could not be prevailed on to enter the room.

His refusal to enter the room upset their plan, which was to tell him of the message and then kill him before he could cry for help. That night, however, according to Mrs. Uhl, they received another message from the dead Brady, telling them to accomplish their purpose at once or the spirits would punish them. So they resolved to wait no longer.

At sunrise on the morning of June 29 Mrs. Uhl procured a key to the door of her husband's room. She crept downstairs silently, followed by Edgar with his shotgun. Unlocking the door so quietly that her husband was not aroused from his sleep, she sent Edgar into the room and kept watch.

Edgar awoke his father, who sat up in bed. Instantly the son pulled the trigger of the gun, emptying the charge into his father's head. The body fell forward over the footboard of the bed. Edgar stole from the room. His mother locked the door and went to the spirit-room once more, and Edgar hurried to town.

When the sheriff's office was opened for the day they found the young man waiting on the steps and demanding to be locked up. When they asked him what he had done he sent them to the hotel, saying that they would find out.

Mrs. Uhl met the police at the hotel door and gave them the key to her husband's room, in which they found the body. They questioned her as to the meaning of the crime, but she replied only, "The spirits told us to do it and we had to."

Mrs. Uhl and Edgar were, of course, locked up. Edgar seemed from the first to be concerned but little with the consequences of his terrible crime, and would say nothing when questioned. The mother, however, began to brood at once, refusing to eat any food. In a few days she had become apparently insane, and has called constantly and piteously for her dead husband. She has eaten scarcely anything, and is starving herself so surely that the physicians at the jail do not believe she can live long enough to answer to her indictment by the grand jury in October.

Cora Uhl, the deaf and dumb daughter, was not present during the murder. She had been sent a short time before back to the State Institution for Deaf Mutes, at Columbus, of which she has been an inmate for some years. But after the murder she was brought to Marietta to see her mother and brother in the hope that she could make them talk and explain the reason for their crime.

She could get nothing from her mother, but the result of her meeting with Edgar brought out the facts of the case as already stated.

"The spirits wanted papa killed," she said to the Sunday World correspondent, "and that is why Eddie and mamma did it."

Brother's Spirit commanded Killing.

"What spirit?" she was asked, and replied, "Why, Brother Brady's, of course. My mother told me papa would die, and that was two weeks before he did. But I didn't know they would have to kill him to make him die."

"Did your mamma shoot your father?"

"Oh, no; it was Brother Eddie. She wasn't strong enough."

"How do you know Eddie did it?"

"Well, he didn't tell me so, but when I asked him he looked very happy, so I know he did it."

Cora's conversation was carried on by means of a pad of paper and a pencil, of course, but her answers were given rapidly, though in broken, hurried sentences, showing the excitement under which she lingers. In fact, the girl is as much of a believer in Spiritualism as her brother and mother, and threatens to commit suicide if the two guilty ones are not released.

The son continues silent on the details of the crime, and yet when a word does escape him he shows that he has a craftiness that will make it difficult for the authorities to secure his conviction without the testimony of his mother. When asked why he did not confess so that his mother could be released, he replied:

"If I was as sick as she is I would. But why should I confess when she is dying? When her lips are sealed who can prove that I killed my father?"

Review of Passing Events.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE, EDITOR-AT-LARGE, N. S. A.

The existence of a "subconscious mind', is purely hypothetical. It was first suggested by Dr. Carpenter under ander another name--"unconscious cerebration"--and has been for thirty years or more, stock in trade of all would-be exposers. It was taken as a plausible exlanation of the phenomena. As a theory it should explain all these and all connected. It covers a very small part, and that not as satisfactorily as the spiritual.

Thoughts on Mediumship.

Mr. E. W. Wallis of England, has, with the collaboration of Mrs. Wallis, written a very valuable book, "A Guide to Mediumship," which is condensed into a lecture on the above subject, with the further title of "Useful Hints to Beginners for the Conduct of Spirit Circles." This lecture is so valuable that it is difficult to select passages for quotation, as one is inclined to give the whole to the reader as the best that can be said on the subject.

In the beginning the lecturer says: "As mediumship depends on natural sensitiveness, it follows that mediums have to be discovered and developed. Many people who are sensitive to spirit influence, but do not know it, might become valuable workers for Spiritualism if they understood their own powers and were rightly trained, and I know of no better means for the development of latent mediumship than the harmonious home circle."

We believe that more has been accomplished in extending Spiritualism by the home circle than by any other, and Mr. Wallis rightly gives it prominence. It is to Spiritualism what the prayer meeting is to the church.

He is not inclined to refer every spasm of hysteria or out-of-the-way manifestation to "Obsession" or "Demonism," as many do. The fear aroused in the minds of beginners may bring the very thing feared. He most truthfully says:

"I am firmly convinced that no healthy, well-informed, level-headed, truth-loving and pure-minded medium is likely to be overpowered by obsessing spirits. He may possibly be annoyed for a time by undesirable influences, but he will not submit to their domination."

Because spirits communicate it does not certainly follow that they are wise, and we should not regard any spirit as authority. This is his advice, and be memorized by every medium and investigator: "Young mediums should not sit by themselves; neither should they go from circle to circle; nor sit more than twice a week; nor prolong their sittings for more than an hour; nor attend public circles; nor attempt to get automatic writing at all hours. It is by disorderly practices such as these that nearly all of those who complain of being "obsessed" have brought their troubles on themselves!

Mr. Wallis clearly defines his position regarding fraud as practiced by those who pretend to be mediums. He has in his investigations found many who practiced fraud, but never one who, aside from this, was not a medium. This aggravates their sins. If the dark circle was dispensed with, the most prolific means of deception would be done away with. The "exposures" which have harmed Spiritualism must have been in the dark room, where "tests" are impossible.

As darkness is not essential for the production of the phenomena—because they have been given in the light of day one feels like saying amen to the following:

"I had almost said 'wicked'—practice of holding promiscuous dark seances. Not that I object to darkness as such—but because it favors deception, renders accurate observation impossible, and thus necessitates test conditions, and arouses doubt and suspicion in the minds of critical observers."

Good advice brings this lecture to a close: "Try the spirits. It is not wise to become as clay in the hands of the potter, therefore beware of flatterers (spirits) and decline to submit to those who promise great things if you will obey them. Do not neglect your duties nor permit spirits to intrude upon you except at the times set apart for your circles. Do not solicit spirit advice on daily life affairs, and examine very carefully all their suggestions—then act on your own responsibility. Take all the help they give thankfully, but keep a level head and judge for yourselves."

How much disaster, disappointment and humiliation would have been saved, had the above advice always been taken! There is nothing in mediumship that calls for abandonment of self-control. On the contrary, understood and rightly cultivated, it is the foundation of the strongest, and most influential character.

About Angels.

As an object lesson showing how indefinite are the ideas about spirits, entertained by church members, the action of the clergymen on the angel ornamentation of the Belmost Memorial Chapel annexed to the cathedral of St. John the Divine, is interesting. The cathedral now in process of erection on Morningside Heights, New York, is to cost $20,000,000 and to be the grandest church structure in America. In fulfillment of his contract the sculptor placed two score of angels in the scheme of ornamentation. He modeled them according to the traditions of his art, as feminine. They were exquisitely beautiful with the radiance of heaven on their faces. It is, when you think of it, a little strange that painter and sculptor have from ancient times, taken woman as the type of purity, spirituality and all qualities transcendent. Perhaps it is more than homage to the sex, a deserved tribute.

The sculptor was delighted with his work, and those who were so fortunate as to gain admission admired the wonderful expression, and beauty of form.

Not so the clergymen. They were shocked beyond expression. They talked about it until it almost reached a scandal. Rev. Dr. Peters, secretary of the building committee, was deeply stirred in mind. All the clergy felt there was "not enough repose" in the sixteen angels at the entrance. "There was not enough repose" in the angels elsewhere. They had heard of Gabriel, Azrael, Michael and Raphael, men every one. Where did the Bible speak of a female angel, in defiance of Scripture and to the scandal of the church!

These Episcopals have no saints, like the Catholics, and as every saint is now an angel, presumably, had the sculptor been before another audience he might have held a plausible argument. As it was, he was snuffed out.

The "forty lady angels," so beautiful in form and attitude, so attractive in expression, would lead to the ruin of the clergy and distract the thoughts of worshipers.

They must be changed, and the poor sculptor has to go over his work again. The feminine faces are to be made masculine, and forty men angels will sternly look down on pulpit and pew, an incongruous and laughable combination of art and superstition.

There are two women, at least, even clergymen should not object to: Eve, who by her inquisitive disposition, brought knowledge into the world, and Mary, who gave them their redeemer. Yet the sculptor would idealize them and they would be detrimental to the morals of those who believe only in "men angels."

What do these clergymen believe regarding angels and the next life?

Have they any idea at all of the future existence? There are as many women as men—nearly—in the world, and there should be the same proportion in the next.

But these clergymen appear to believe that men only become angels! That a female angel is imaginary, and to be excluded from the church.

And yet without the help of women, the churches of this country would not exist a year! After all their labor and devotion, small appreciation do they receive—rather insult, and the constant reminder that they are daughters of naughty Eve, and exist only that there may be men in the world.

It was a hasty movement of the sculptor, to break the inimitable creations of his art, yet he is scarcely blamable under the smart of the uncalled-for criticism of the clerical brethren. Why should they see only sex in this ideal work? Why should their morals be so shocked at an appeal to esthetic taste? Are their minds so corrupt that they see only corruption? The pagan Greek saw in the human form the most beautiful, purest, and most divine creation. It was left for Puritan prudery to clothe Venus and Apollo.

"Spiritualism a Product of the Sub-Conscious Mind."

The following was sent to the St. Louis Republic, in answer to a lengthy screed written by one who seems absolutely ignorant of Spiritualism While the Republic can publish this attack of a preacher who has lost his church for cause, it refuses to publish a reply that correctly informs the people on the subject:

Editor of the Republic:—The Rev. A. T. Osbron, in the Republic of Oct. 2, has an article under the title, Spiritualism a Product of the Subconscious Mind," which is so at variance with the conclusions reached by numerous investigators equally competent and trustworthy as himself, and millions of its believers, that a brief presentation of their side of the subject seems essential for the right understanding of the public.

In the first place he does not appear to be aware that Spiritualism has long since been a great deal more than the phenomena he attempts to explain. On these phenomena a new psychology, a new philosophy of life here and hereafter, a new religion has been founded, and Spiritualism means this system with all its fundamental manifestations and facts. It stands for the absolute realm of psychical phenomena, which it essays to mold into a science as demonstrated and accurate as any branch of material science.

Hence to say that the phenomena are products of the "subconscious mind" may be allowable, but to apply this to Spiritualism, is vague and "unscientific" in the extreme.

In his lengthy article Rev. Osbron comes to these conclusions:

Every strange test of Spiritualism which cannot be duplicated by physical law must be placed in the class of psychic phenomena.

Every test known to Spiritualism and placed among psychic manifestations may be duplicated by hypnotic suggestion, the subjective mind furnishing the field of operation.

The basis of scientific investigation being that we are not permitted to attribute any phenomena to supernatural power which may be produced by natural law, the return of the disembodied spirit of the dead is unscientific, hence untrue.

If Rev Osbron had given a single fact or argument leading up to his conclusions, there would be a better opportunity for rebutting testimony, but he has not. The facts he does present, have no relevancy to the case. He deals in assertions from the first, where he predicates that there is a sub-conscious mind by which all spiritual phenomena are explained.

Now the existence of a "sub-conscious mind" is purely hypothetical. It was first suggested by Dr. Carpenter under another name—"unconscious cerebration"—and has been for thirty years or more, stock in trade of all would-be exposers. It was taken as a plausible explanation of the phenomena. As a theory it should explain all these and all connected. It covers a very small part and that not as satisfactorily as the spiritual.

Rev. Osbron asserts, or rather assumes this theory as demonstrated, presenting it with autocratic assurance of an axiom. Hence he makes no attempt to prove it. Yet here is the vital point. It is very doubtful if man has two minds, an active conscious mind, and an underlying, "sub-conscious mind," whose activity the first does not recognize; a mind of which we know nothing yet inconceivably transcending our normal powers.

Dr. Hudson, the leader in this method of explanation, utterly fails to prove this theory. In fact it has not arisen to the plane of a theory even, but at best is a "working hypothesis," that is a rough means of co-ordinating the facts.

If the hypothesis be denied, all Rev. Osbron's conclusions are baseless, and without support. For argument, we grant that he is correct. He has been a student of "psychical phenomena," "suggestion," "telepathy," and "mental vibrations," and this is what he says on results:

"A trumpet (in my demonstrations) floats about in midair. A bell rises into space from a table and produces weird musical tones as it floats here and there. A young man after having been placed in a cataleptic state rises at my command above my head, though I do not touch him. I also place two slates together after they have been examined by the audience, and in a few moments I have a message from the spirit world."

He can do all this by his hypnotic influence on the "sub-conscious mind!" If Rev. Osbron can do these things he boasts of being able to do before audiences, he can do what no other man ever has done or ever claimed to do. He can go before the public and draw crowded houses from one end of the civilized world to the other. Where are the witnesses of the statement: "A young man having been placed in a cataleptic estate, rises at the command, above my head, though I do not touch him." What a power the "sub conscious mind" must be just because Rev. Osbron suggests to it to lift this young man above the suggester's head and suspend his one hundred and fifty pounds or more, in mid air! If one believes this, he will have no difficulty in also believing the old story of a man lifting himself by his boot straps.

Rev. Osbron's experiments are interesting, but there is no applicability to Spiritualism. They lead in an entirely different direction.

Men of far greater scientific attainments have arrived at diametrically different conclusions. Sir William Crookes, president of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, with Professor Sidgwick, F. W. H. Myers, Professor Gurley, Mr. Balfour, present premier of England, commenced their labors in the psychical field under the name of "The Psychical Society." Sir W. Crookes was president. After years of investigation of all forms of spiritual manifestations, the so-called physical, and the purely psychical, they gave their verdict in favor of the spiritual origin of the manifestations. Sir W. Crookes wrote two valuable books, "Researches in the Phenomena of Spiritualism," and "Spiritualism Reviewed in the Light of Modern Science." His conclusions may be condensed in this sentence: "Not with me a matter of opinion, but absolute knowledge." Myers also wrote an account of his investigations in two ponderous volumes, in which he demonstrates his belief in Spiritualism. Not a word from these eminent scientists about the "sub-conscious mind," nor a doubt expressed that the phenomena—the genuine—were not of spiritual origin.

If we admit that all physical manifestations—as the movement of a table—are sub-conscious muscular action, and the intelligence manifested in the movement is telepathy, then such movements can only give answers that are known to someone connected with the experiment.

Telepathy is a convenient word, elastic and mysterious, high-sounding and an excellent covering for ignorance. Plainly it means that one person can send out thoughts which can be received by another. But all persons cannot receive these thought vibrations. They must be in harmony with the sender to be able to receive. In wireless telegraphy a transmitting instrument sends out a message, but only the receiver attuned in harmony can catch the vibrations. So in the thoughts sent out by a transmitting mind. Of the thousands of other minds unlike in fibre, the thought-waves are unrecognized. Only such as are in harmony are receiving instruments.

It will at once be seen that telepathy must be confined to narrow bounds, its manifestations rare, and the most unpropitious place for its manifestations would be furnishing intelligence to a moving table.

Again, if such intelligence was beyond that of anyone present, or of anyone except the spirit purporting to communicate, do not the facts support the spiritual theory more than any other?

If an occurrence in the future is foretold, how is it possible to refer it to telepathy, which means the reception by a medium or table, of thought waves from some thinking mind, for there can be no vibrations unless started from some intelligent "transmitter."

I could produce a volume of applying facts from my own experience. I will give only one. By the movement of a table at which my wife was sitting, it was spelled by response to my call of the alphabet, that her father would depart this life in three months, giving from a loved sister who had recently the exact date. This claimed to be from a loved sister who had recently passed to the spirit world. It was affirmed on several occasions, although his replies to the anxious letters of my wife gave no indication of failing health. The day before the date thus given, in a similar manner, a communication came to my wife from this sister, saying that a telegram would reach her the next morning, that her father was very ill, and she must prepare to go at once. She did prepare, the telegram came, and she reached her father's side to receive his last words, at the hour predicted.

If this be "sub-conscious mind," would it not be well to put the conscious mind to sleep and live in this exalted sub-conscious state?

Is it not more rational and satisfactory to believe that the spirit sister, deeply interested, came direct and communicated, than that a wandering thought wave acted sub-consciously to move a table responsive to the letters of the alphabet?

Spiritualists may thank Rev. Osbron for one thing—his admission of the facts. Of late we have heard only of frauds, that all mediums were deceivers, preying on the weak-minded and superficial observers. Rev. Osbron sees no fraud, all is genuine—that is genuine telepathy and sub-consciousness. This is a step toward the light, for if admitted genuine, whatever theory may be adopted in explanation will soon show its weakness, and incompetency to cover all the field, and their spiritual origin will finally be admitted.

Proceedings of the N. S. A. Convention.

THE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

Of the National Spiritualists' Association, of the United States of America, at the Unitarian Church, Eighth St. and Mary Place, Minneapolis, Minn., October 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th, 1905

MORNING SESSION, OCTOBER 17.

Three hundred delegates from all over the United States and Canada were in the Unitarian Church when the Thirteenth Annual Convention of the National Association of Spiritualists opened its four days' meeting. The church was tastefully decorated for the occasion, in which "Old Glory" played a prominent part.

It was ten o'clock when the assembly was formally opened by the singing of "Nearer My God to Thee." The invocation followed by Mrs. Mary T. Longley, of Washington, D. C.. Mayor Jones was to have delivered an address of welcome but important official business made this impossible and Ralph Wheelock spoke as the mayor's representative.

APOLOGIZES FOR THE WEATHER.

Mr. Wheelock assured the delegates on behalf of the chief executive of Minneapolis, that the city belonged to them. He said the prevailing cloudy weather was not the kind usually given so distinguished a company, but was of the opinion that material conditions were inconsiderate when the skies of the great beyond were rosy, as they are with the Spiritualists.

J. D. Maxwell, of St Paul, President of the Minnesota State Spiritualists' Association, welcomed the delegates in behalf of that organization. He told how proud he was to have them here and hoped they would feel well repaid for their visit.

H. D. Barrett, of Canaan, Maine, president of the National organization, in a very eloquent manner responded to the addresses of welcome and thanked Mr. Wheelock and President Maxwell for the cordiality made manifest by them. He reviewed in a general manner the work of the organization during the past year and was happy to be able to say that great progress had been made.

President Barrett appointed the following committee on credentials: H. D. Richardson, Aurora, N. Y.; G. C. Love, Portland, Oregon, and F. A Willing, Stillwater, Minn.

The following Committee on Rules was appointed: Will J. Erwood, La Crosse, Wis., E. W. Bond, Lake Helen, Fla., E. A. Schram, of Ohio, and Geo. C. Holburt of Iowa City, Iowa.

FIVE MINUTE TALKS.

The last hour of the morning session was given up to five minute conference addresses. These were opened by Mrs. R. S. Lillie of California. She spoke of the laws of some states which interfere with the work of spirit mediums. She believes the mediums themselves are to blame to a certain extent for such laws, contending that they do not exert the holy and sacred power of mediumship to its full extent. She said the power of a medium was only limited by the strength of the medium herself. She said the Spiritualists were the only people on earth who penetrated the great beyond and revealed the mysteries of the beautiful spirit world.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At the session Monday afternoon, the following standing committees were appointed: Committee on President's Report, J. S. Maxwell, Minnesota; Frank Walker, New York; C. D. Pruden, New York; Mrs. Mong, Indiana, and Mrs. Esther Bosley, Washington.

Committee on Secretary's Report: W. F. Peck, Missouri; Mrs. Donagan, Missouri; John W. Ring, Texas; Mrs. R. S. Lillie, California; H. J. Moore, Montana.

Committee on Auditing and Treasurer's Report: John D. Vail, Michigan; Olin D. Whittier, Missouri; A. J. Nicholson, Oscar Edgerly, Michigan.

Committe on Resolutions: G. W. Kates, Kansas; Moses Hull, Wisconsin; Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, Illinois; Nettie Field, Missouri; Rev. B. F. Austin, New York.

Committee on Ways and Means: Carrie E. S. Twing, Maine; T. U. Reynolds, New York; Rev. W. J. Erwood, Wisconsin; Mr. Willing, Iowa; W. McCormick, Montana; C. D. Pruden, Maryland.

Committee on Delegates' Reports: M. E. Cadwallader, Pennsylvania; Rena D. Chapman, Michigan; Louis P. Williams, Maine; Oscar F. Evertz, Missouri; C. A. Allen, Indiana.

The reports of President and Secretary were read and referred to the Standing Committee. The reports in full will be found in another column of the paper.

The Treasurer's report was read and showed that the association was in good financial condition, there being at the present time a surplus fund of $18,486.82.

EVENING SESSION.

A lucid statement of the doctrines of Spiritualism and its attitude in regard to the potent question of the day was set forth in a masterly manner by Rev. B. F. Austin in his address at the evening session held at the First Unitarian church last evening.

Speaking of the "divorce evil" Mr. Austin declared that divorce should not be regarded as an evil but rather as a splendid proof of the advanced stage of civilization, and speaking further said: "Spiritualism, holding to the doctrine of absolute liberty of man, woman and child, asserts that no man or woman should be compelled to live a lifetime in domestic hell because in their ignorance or blindness they have entered upon a foolish and unnatural contract. Yet so sacred and so many are the interests involved that no one should lightly make or break the marriage bond."

Speaking of the result of Spiritualism in the world at large Mr. Austin touched upon socialistic problems of the day, and denounced society as now constituted as a direct denial of the human brotherhood of man, of equality and justice, and stated that one of the greatest missions of every Spiritualist present was to swell the great wave of reform which is sweeping over the country and aid in its final triumph.

Mr. Austin was for twenty-five years pastor of a Methodist Church and for seven years head of the Methodist conference in Canada. He stated in his address that he hoped to atone for his many years of orthodox preaching by as many years propounding the higher doctrines of Spiritualism.

Another element of note on the program was the thirty-minutes lecture given by Mrs. Laura G. Fixen. The eternal being of the soul, which existed when the world was chaos, and before the stars sprang into being, was the theme of Mrs. Fixen's lecture. Before our advent in this world, Mrs Fixen stated, we were unconscious of existence, but today, and from now on, we will live in conscious being.

Spirit messages by Mrs. Mary A. Weaver and Rev. E. W. Sprague completed the program, which was interspersed by several beautiful musical selections.

The benediction was given by Thomas Grimshaw.

WEDNESDAY MORNING—NEW BUSINESS.

Mr. C. L. Stevens, President of the First Spiritualist Church, of Pittsburgh, and Trustee of the N. S. A., introduced the matter of providing a suitable legal blank for members who wish to have their funeral services conducted according to the religion of Spiritualism. Mr. Stevens presented a blank form for consideration which had been prepared under the auspices of the church he represented. It was discussed and referred to a committee. The proper form for such a blank will be outlined and presented for the consideration of the Convention at a later session.

The matter of a uniform system for the indorsement of mediums also came up and on motion the matter was placed in the hands of a committee whose duty it will be to bring the question before the convention in some tangible form.

Max Gentzke, editor of "Lichtstrahlen," the only German Spiritualist paper printed, appeared before the convention and wished it to take some action relative to the formation of a stock company, the business of which shall be to translate into foreign languages for distribution among the new English speaking Spiritualists of this and foreign countries literature which bears on the doctrine of their faith.

The matter was referred to the Board of incoming Trustees with power to act, and it is likely that such a company will be formed.

"Counterfeit commercial mediums steal the livery of Heaven to serve the Devil and the most vital issue before this Convention and for all Spiritualists is to fight these frauds and fakirs and to expose their nefarious methods."—Attorney Halburt.

By a decisive vote of 55 to 17 the National Spiritualist association at the morning session of their convention, instructed its Board of Trustees to protest to the United States postal authorities against the admission to the mails of any newspaper or periodical which contains advertisements from those claiming to be Spiritualists.

Included in the condemned list are fortune tellers, clairvoyants and astrologers. Heated remarks relative to the matter were made by many of the delegates and counterfeit practices carried on under the wing of legitimate Spiritualism was a target for the most severe and caustic condemnation.

CASE OF MRS. FOLSOM.

Today an important event of the morning will be the decision of the Board of Credentials in the case of Mrs. C. W. Stewart of St Louis, who represents a delegation from that city.

President Barrett gave The Tribune the following official statement concerning the matter:

"The Stewart-Folsom case has not been before the Convention at all. The matter is one of long standing. The Board of Trustees passed upon an appeal that had been made to it and handed the decision to the interested party. The fraudulent or non-fraudulent nature of Mrs. Folsom's work was not mentioned in the Convention. That issue was not before it. No one has been denied a hearing upon any question involving his personal rights. The proceedings of the Convention are one thing and those of the Board another. Star chamber practice has not been resorted to and will never be tolerated in a Spiritualist convention.

Mrs. Folsom asked and was granted permission to speak in her own behalf, and said:

"I want to say to you as a representative of all pure and undefiled Spiritualism, and before my God, I am not guilty. You have condemned me without a hearing. You have not changed my religion and I am thankful for this opportunity of defending myself, and I say to the charges against me, 'not guilty.'"

Those who defended the action of the committee feel justified in the stand which they have taken, as in making its finding the Committee considered a most exhaustive report of the charges against the delegates debarred. Before the debate the chair ruled that the entire case be opened for the N. S. A. by George B. Warne, chairman of the committee of investigation. He read the report of his committee and replied replied to the opening arguments of to the opening arguments of Mr. Williams, who represented Mrs. Folsom.

During the afternoon Prof. Maria L. Sanford appeared before the Convention with greetings from the Federation of Woman's Clubs and the session closed with the reading of the Missionary report by E. W. Sprague, who with Mrs. Sprague has made a tour of nearly every state in the Union during the year. He recommended the adoption of a course of reading for local societies and gave an encouraging account of the work in all sections of the country.

At the afternoon session reports of missionaries and special agents and and usages and educational work were read. The committee on the President's Report also submitted their report. The full reports will be published later.

EVENING SESSION.

This evening's program opens with an invocation by Mrs. Tillie U. Reynolds. Mr. and Mrs Zumbach will sing "I Will Magnify Thee." Rev. W. F. Peck will deliver a thirty-minutes lecture as will also Oscar A Edgerley. There will be spirit messages by Mrs. C. A. Sprague and Mrs. Eva McCoy.

Over 1,000 people clamored for admittance to the evening session of the Spiritualists' Convention, and hundreds were unable to find even standing room and were turned away. So great has been the demand for more room that beginning tonight over-flow meetings will be held in the basement of the church so that those who are unable to find seating room in the main auditorium can be accommodated. A regular program of music by local talent, and addresses by prominent lecturers of the convention will be given, followed by the usual reading of spirit messages.

An eloquent plea for original purity and scientific investigation of Spiritualism was made by Rev. W. F. Peck in his address before the convention last night.

A brief talk was given by Oscar A. Edgerly. John W. Ring was elected delegate at the afternoon session to extend greetings to the Convention of the American Sunday School Association now in session here.

THURSDAY, OCT. 19.

A very spirited session of the Spiritualist convention was held at the Unitarian church Thursday morning, of the convention.

The matter was started by J. S. Maxwell of St. Paul, who, in a five minutes' talk, took decided exception to the action of the convention Wednesday, when it instructed the board of trustees to confer with the postmaster-general in an effort to have papers containing advertisements of alleged Spiritualists excluded from the mails. Mr. Maxwell forcibly declared that such impostors have no connection whatever with the legitimate Spiritualists, and that as representatives of true Spiritualism they had made a grave mistake in acting upon the matter. He also wanted it understood that he believed in the freedom of the American press.

This opened a discussion that proved to be fast and furious. Delegate Erwood thought a mistake had been made in looking toward the postal authorithorities for aid.

"The less we have to do with the postmaster general at the present time," said Mr. Erwood, "the better off we shall be."

By a practically unanimous vote the convention decided to rescind their action of Wednesday, taking the matter out of the hands of the board of trustees.

Delegate Willing started the flames again by moving that all ordained mediums who advertise in newspapers have their ordination papers revoked.

Several delegates jumped to their feet with such cries as "I advertise and I'm not a fraud." "Advertising is all right and we can't be stopped."

The entire matter was ultimately put to sleep by the passage of a motion to lay it on the table.

Moses Hull, president of the Morris Pratt Spiritualist school at Whitewater, Wis., drew the attention of the convention to that institution, and was sorry to report that it had not received all the support that had been hoped for. The institution was, he said, at the present time in financial straits, although a reasonable appropriation from the National Association would place it in a condition to go ahead with the work it had before it to do.

A missionary report from H. D. Barrett was received, and showed much progress was being made in that line of work. Similar reports were also received from H. C. Dorn, G. H. Brooks, and Max Gentske, and Mrs. C. E. S. Twing, and Lyman C. Howe presented his report as Historian.

Thomas Grimshaw reported concerning his reception in the city of London. He stated that all Europe was becoming aroused over the doctrine of Spiritualism and that it was only a question of time until what is now a national convention would become an international one.

At the Thursday afternoon session it was voted to appropriate the sum of $1,000 for the Morris Pratt Spiritualist school, located at Whitewater, Wis.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPORT.

The committee on the president's report reported and after considerable discussion on certain sections relative to the best means of procedure, it was adopted, and a glowing tribute paid to the chief executive for his statesmanlike document and the valuable points brought out for consideration.

EVENING SESSION.

Snow and rain in no wise checked the interest which has on the preceddays been manifested in the evening sessions of the Spiritualist convention, and last night the Unitarian church was well filled.

The spirit messages given by Mrs. Frances Wheeler and E. W. Sprague, received the closest attention. Some mirth was provoked when, in response to Mr. Sprague's call for those who desired the services of a medium, a large number of the young members of the audience arose to their feet.

Several music numbers of classic quality varied the evening's program, the Sappho quartet, Miss Tenie Murphy and Mrs. Pratt, Misses Paulson and Murphy appearing. The invocation was offered by Rev. Geo. W. Kates and the benediction was pronounced by the Rev. John W. Ring.

Two notable addresses were made, the one being the fraternal address by Rev. Henry R. Rose of Newark, N. J., as representative of the Universalist general convention, the other by Mrs. Helen P. Russegue, a delegate from Connecticut. In an eloquent oration Mr. Rose dwelt upon the loftiness of the American ideals as typified by the mottoes and allegorical figures which adorn the rotunda of the new national library building at Washington, D. C., and which relate to the liberal arts and sciences. The religious spirit which is present in them all was especially emphasized by the speaker.

In a lecture which abounded in epigrammatic sayings, Mrs. Russegue discussed the philosophy of Spiritualism. "Spiritualism," said she, "teaches that the door is open between heaven and earth. It demands a higher life. There is no religious form of belief that expresses all the truth. But Spiritualism teaches many noble thoughts. It never tells the story of death. The knowledge of immortality is the summit and crowning glory of Spiritualism."

FRIDAY, OCT. 20.

The opening session of the last day of the National Spiritualist Convention at the Unitarian Church was about the warmest of many heated sessions. First there was a lively discussion on certain resolutions offered by the Committee, dealing with the question of fraud mediums, and this was followed by a sensational address to the Convention by Delegate W. F. Peck, of St Louis, Mo., in which he roundly scored the Association for what he termed extravagance.

He deplored the fact that over $7,000 is paid every year for salaries and personal expenses of the National Board of Trustees. He declared that, inasmuch as delegates were required to pay their own expenses, it was no more than right that the Trustees and officers show the same spirit of sacrifice.

This caused a howl of indignation from the floor, loud and strong enough to interrupt the speaker who, however, was allowed to finish his remarks.

DELEGATES EXCITED.

Mr. Peck had hardly finished when a dozen delegates begged for recognition. It was the voice of most of them that it was a distressing mistake to criticise the Board of Trustees or other officers of the Association and insisted that they deserved the greatest measure of praise.

In accepting the report of the Committee on resolutions the Convention went on record as being opposed to what is known as capital punishment, believing it to be a relic of barbarism All wars at this stage of progress were declared to be immoral and that all disputes between nations should be settled by arbitration. The formation of boy brigades, militia parades, and other methods which glorify war were deplored.

The Convention also went on record as being in favor of the electoral franchise for women. A committee was appointed to raise funds for the erection of temples in which to hold Spiritualist meetings. The committee is to report at the next National Convention.

The following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, The proposed inter-church conference of the Evangelical churches have declined to affiliate with the Uni-

THE BIBLE New and Revised Edition.

Authenticity, Credibility, Morality.

JOHN E. REMSBURG'S GREAT WORK

Ingersoll's desire that somebody should at last tell the whole truth about the Bible has been brilliantly fulfilled. No Freethinker worthy of the name can afford to pass over Remsburg's book in silence. Like Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," may it, let us hope, find admirers and translators in other languages. And again, like Paine's book, may this brilliant work bring to its author the praise of posterity.—Der Freidenker (Milwaukee).

This great work on the Bible by Mr. Remsburg is most valuable—it is an encyclopedia of information in regard to the Bible, and surpasses in importance all other works of the kind now published. It is up-to-date in every particular. Price, $1.25.

THE TO-MORROW OF DEATH,

Or the Future Life According to Science. By Louis Figuier. Translated from the French by S. R. Crocker. A very fascinating work. This fine volume might well have been entitled Spiritualism Demonstrated by Science. It is written in that peculiar interesting style in which French writers excel when they would popularize scientific subjects in adaptation to the needs of the general reader. The author says: "There is a true and respectable idea in Spiritualism," and regards as proved "the fact of communication between superhumans and the inhabitants of earth." Price, $1.50.

The National Spiritualists Association.

Annual Report of the President, Harrison D. Barrett, for the Year Ending October 20, 1905.

To the Spiritualists of America:—Once again we are in convention assembled, and in compliance with the requirements of the Constitution, Bylaws, Rules and Regulations of the National Spiritualists Association, I have the honor to submit my annual report as president of that organization.

General Interest.

Perhaps in no one year in a quarter of a century has there been such general public interest manifested in Spiritualism as has appeared during the last twelve months. It has been a live subject of discussion in all quarters, and the secular press has teemed with articles, if not actually favorable to Spiritualism, certainly not wholly antagonistic to it. It has been the favorite theme with the street-corner philosopher, and village sage, with physician, preacher and layman, throughout the year, and no magazine or periodical has been at all popular unless it has had one or more articles in each issue bearing upon occultism. The same is true of the novels most popular at the present hour. Psychic thought must appear somewhere in their pages in order to insure a wide reading on the part of the public.

Abstract, Not Concrete.

I fully admit that these discussions and this marked interest in our movement is abstract rather than concrete. Still it shows the trend of the public mind, and can be made a mighty power for good if the Spiritualists themselves will but take advantage of the situation by bringing into form these abstractions afloat in the atmosphere, and concreting them to aid the cause in all quarters of our land. This present popular interest has been respectful in tone and decidedly intellectual in character. An impartial hearing is all that Spiritualism has ever asked for itself, and this splendid opportunity should be turned to advantage by the Spiritualists of the land. I hope that this convention will enact legislative measures as may make it possible to concrete these popular inchoate expressions of thought into well cemented girders of support to our movement as a whole.

Local Societies.

Such a perceptible increase of interest in spiritual matters on the part of the public must necessarily react favorably and helpfully upon our local societies. I am pleased to report that our local meetings, also our camps, have been more largely attended than for several years past. At least, this is true of all sections from which I have been able to secure information. To what extent membership has been increased, I am unable to state. I am of the opinion that membership has not increased in just proportion to the increase of interest on the part of the public in general. This leads me to say again that our gain is abstract, rather than concrete. The problem of concretion is yet before us, and almost wholly unsolved so far as it applies to the work of inducing people to openly proclaim their convictions to the world. I repeat in this sentence everything I have said for the past twelve years with regard to the great importance of building up our local societies and establishing them upon permanent footings. I recommend that a special hour be assigned for the consideration of this subject and urge that something more than eloquent addresses and well-composed resolutions be the outcome of this convention in this respect.

Possible Helps.

As one of the possible helps in the great work of strengthening our local societies, I urge this convention to consider the permanent settlement of our speakers, either for one year, or for a term of years. Wherever this experiment has been faithfully tried, under right conditions, it has proved a success. The local society has grown in influence, membership and social prestige, until it has become an important factor in the religious life of the city or town in which it was located. Witness the long pastorates of J. M. Peebles and F. L. H. Willis in Battle Creek, Mich., of Thomas Grimshaw and W. F. Peck in St. Louis, F. A. Wiggin in Boston, Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond in Chicago, G. W. Kates in Rochester, N. Y., and others almost too numerous to mention, in proof of the foregoing statement. I recommend action upon this subject.

Another possible help is that of holding one meeting for phenomenal and another for religious work. Their separation in by gone years aided the movement then, and it is a question whether or not it might have the same result now. I recognize that phenomena are as much needed to-day as they have ever been, and I would not do away with them. They should be presented as proofs of our philosophical affirmations and religious deductions; therefore, they should go hand in hand with them. But the question has been raised as to their being of greater value to our cause when presented by themselves, and I submit the matter to you for consideration. I make no recommendation with regard to the matter, but place it before you at the earnest request of some of our most faithful workers for such action as you may deem best.

Another possible help in the work of upbuilding our local societies may be rendered by this convention through the adoption of some plan by means of which unworthy persons may not be placed at the front as representatives of Spiritualism. For the coming year, I know of some societies that have been victimized in this respect, their officers not being informed with regard to the persons they were engaging. It is not helpful to the growth of local societies to have criminals, religious renegades, and Spiritualistic apostates upon their platforms. I believe that the hands of the N. S. A. officials should be strengthened by this intelligent body of delegates to the end that this condition may never again arise. It is true that the N. S. A. does not presume to interfere with the management of the affairs of local societies; but I contend that it would not be interference in any sense whatever, were the N. S. A. secretary to be instructed to send certified copies of the records of these defectives to the officers of local societies employing them. I recommend action upon this subject and urge the convention to remember that nothing can be gained by temporizing with, or trembling before these people.

Missionary Work.

Missionary work is, or should be, the best means to organize and strengthen local societies. This principle has been recognized as a truth at nearly all of our conventions, and the N. S. A. has worked along that line. At our last annual convention, the trustees of the N. S. A. were directed to employ missionaries and place them in the field as representatives of our National body. This order was duly carried into effect. Rev. E. W. Sprague and wife were employed for the term of one year and directed to put in the major portion of their time west of the Mississippi river. They did faithful work and rendered the N. S. A. most efficient service. I have traversed portions of the territory through which they passed, and bear willing testimony to the good results that came from their labors. Your president was also employed as missionary for a period of six months out of the twelve at different points in the United States. The reports of Mr. and Mrs. Sprague and that of your president as missionaries will be presented later in this convention, from which you will be able to determine the exact value of their labors. A few well-known workers were commissioned missionaries without salary. I hope they will all present reports of what they have succeeded in accomplishing for the N. S. A. during the past year.

Change of Plan.

While excellent work has been done under the present system, I believe still better and greater results can be obtained by a change of plan, at least for the coming year. Last year I recommended that all missionary work be abandoned by the N. S. A., but my recommendation was not adopted by the convention. This year I recommend the continuance of missionary effort in larger measure, but only in co-operation with state associations now organized, limiting all monetary offerings from the N. S. A. to the amounts raised by the state associations. Where no state association exists, I recommend that the missionary work of the N. S. A. be carried on along the present lines of effort, having each missionary under positive orders to confine his efforts to one state or territory until a healthy state association is organized, composed of not less than ten live, working societies. Indian and Oklahoma Territories united, and the state of Colorado can easily be organized into two working state association. I recommend that these divisions be given special attention during the coming year. When a state association unites with the N. S. A., a written contract should be made to the effect that the N. S. A. shall receive one-half of the gross receipts of all missionary meetings held in said state. By this means, healthy growth would eventuate and the stimulus given by the N. S. A. be made the means of establishing continuous work in all portions of the nation.

The Goff Will.

From the report of our honored vice-president, Dr. Warne, you will be informed with regard to the now celebrated Goff Will. He will present in detail, such facts as are in his possession and acquaint you with that which should be done next. This bequest involves over twenty thousand dollars, and the Michigan State Spiritualist Association is the beneficiary. I cannot but feel that the local societies in Michigan have been sadly derelict in their duty in this case, or they would have rendered their state association prompt and generous support. Individual Spiritualists in Michigan are even more reprehensible, for they should have come to the front when the local societies, as units of the state body, failed to do their duty. It is probable that there are ten thousand avowed Spiritualists in Michigan. With this number to back a worthy cause, ten thousand dollars a month should have been forthcoming at the call of the state officers. When both the local societies and individual Spiritualists in Michigan failed to do their duty, the N. S. A. was appealed to for aid which was promptly furnished. It is probable that yet larger sums must be expended in order to save this bequest. I trust that this convention will do its whole duty in this case, and recommend that this paragraph and so much of Vice-president Warne's report as bears upon this same subject, be referred to a special committee under instructions either to devise some plan by which a special fund for the defense of the will be at once raised, or some means set forth by which the ten thousand Spiritualists in Michigan be led to do their duty in this case.

A Vital Issue.

I now invite your attention to a vital issue, affecting the very charter of the N. S. A., that arose during the past year. An attempt was made by a certain clique to overthrow the N. S. A., on the grounds, first, that it was not incorporated as a religious body; second, if a religious body, it was not qualified to act as it has for twelve years past because of the fact than an organization, "national" in character, existed when it was organized, and, therefore, by the right of priority, should exercise all of the functions of the N. S. A., and supersede it in all dealings with the religious and business worlds. Your honored secretary and your president acted promptly in the premises and completely routed the secret enemies of the N. S. A. This attack showed me a possible, if not a real weakness in our organic structure. If our charter and our constitution do not state clearly that Spiritualism is a religion, and that the N. S. A. is a religious organization, they should be made to do so at once. I recommend that this convention take such action as to forever remove from the minds of Spiritualists and non-Spiritualists even the shadow of doubt as to the religious nature of Spiritualism and as to the fact that the N. S. A. is organized and chartered as a religious body. This is a vital issue, and I hope something will be done to protect the N. S. A. from further attacks in this respect. Perhaps the appointment of a special committee to look into this matter and report such plans or amendments as the facts may warrant would be the best means of bringing this subject before the convention in due form.

Another Important Question.

The exacting of a heavy license fee by the civil authorities in several states, from Spiritualistic mediums, for the privilege of practicing their profession in certain localities, has caused no little discussion during the past year. The arrest, trial and fining of two psychics in one state added fuel to the flames, and caused a demand to arise for an investigation of the case. It also brought the license question itself before our people and led them to demand a change in this law. Your president chanced to be in California when the excitement occasioned by the license question was at its height. He was compelled to take action, and, after a careful examination of the law, found that mediums were classed with fortune-tellers, charm-sellers, necromancers, soothsayers, and other fakirs, and with them compelled to pay a license fee of fifteen dollars per month ere they could exercise their powers in the city of Los Angeles. This California law is typical of all other states in regard to this subject. I found that no minister of the gospel of any denomination was compelled to pay this license fee. This fact convinced me that the ordinance was special legislation, therefore as unconstitutional as it was unjust.

After careful study of the question and many consultations with two of the leading lawyers of Los Angeles, I went before the city council, presented a monster petition containing eight hundred names, secured largely through the influence of our true and tried friend, Mrs. R. S. Lillie, and asked that the law be changed so that the Spiritualists, their mediums and ministers, would staud on equal footing with other denominations. I was asked to prepare an amendment, setting forth the desired change, and the whole matter was referred to a committee before which I was to appear at a stated time. I consulted Judge Gordon again, and we decided to ask for the elimination of the four words, "Clairvoyants," "Clairaudients," "Mediums," and "Prophets," from the ordinance, feeling that all other classes therein specified were engaged in commercial enterprises, therefore, liable to an occupation tax or license fee, or both, under the laws of California. A hearing was appointed upon this amendment, and at the request of Judge Gordon I prepared certain documents to present to the committee, setting forth the principles of Spiritualism, and citing the opinions of eminent authorities upon sight, hearing, clairvoyance, clairaudience, psychic phenomena, and other questions that entered into this discussion. These documents are now in the hands of Judge Gordon.

We were unable to have our hearing during my stay in Los Angeles, and after my departure from the city Judge Gordon felt that he could not appear without me, hence rested the case until my return, for I fully expected then to put in the month of September in that vicinity. The hearing can be had at any time when the N. S. A. sees fit to act in this matter, hence the case is unsettled. The passage of this amendment will help all mediums in Los Angeles and serve as a precedent in the work of securing similar repeals in all states where like unjust laws now exist. I recommend that the incoming board of Trustees be instructed at once to push this case to an issue. I would even go so far as to have the president of the National Association, whoever he may be, sent to Los Angeles to co-operate with Judge Gordon in the work of urging the passage of the amendment abeve mentioned. When the four classes named are protected by the civil law, no true medium will be in danger of either persecution or prosecution.

Definitions Needed.

The civil authorities assured me that they had no wish to discriminate unjustly against our people, nor to deal unfairly by them as a body. An occupation tax is exacted of all classes of people engaged in commercial enterprises, and certain license fees of classes that gain their living by amusing the public; or by the practice of mystical arts that appeal to the curiosity of the people, or by downright trickery, legerdemain, and all of its concomitants. This statement applies not only to California, but to other states having similar laws. No teacher of religion is taxed in any state, by reason of his occupation. "Who are teachers of religion in Spiritualism?" "Where is the line of demarkation between the exemplifier of spiritual and religious demonstration, and the one who is a fakir, pure and simple?" "Is it not your duty as Spiritualists to give the civil authorities a correct definition of your terms so that they may know the difference between mediumship and commercialism?" "You Spiritualists cannot expect outsiders to define your terms for you; give us a straightforward definition and we will see to it that the civil law is applied in harmony with its provisions." In reply to these questions in harmony with the above suggestions, I prepared the following definition of terms:

"Any person who sets forth the principles of Spiritualism from the platform or pulpit as a speaker, or who gives comfort, consolation, advice upon spiritual subjects, words of tenderness and love, messages from the departed, soul culture, ethical precepts, suggestions as to right living and right doing, is, as a medium, a teacher and exemplifier of Spiritualism as a religion and should be exempted from taxation. All other phases of mediumship are commercial in character and, therefore, liable to an occupation tax or a license, or both as the authorities may decide." I recommend that this definition, or one that may be devised by this convention that shall be equally explicit and authoritative, be adopted by this honorable body, and placed before the world for our own guidance, as well as that of the civil authorities of the land. We can no longer shut our eyes to the fact that business mediumship is commercial, pure and simple, and has nothing to do with spirituality. When questioned by the court, a certain medium testified that ninety-five per cent of her readings were for business purposes only. The giving of stock-market quotations, location of mines, finding buried treasure, lost articles, etc., constituted her claim to mediumship, and a teacher of religion. The law sees nothing religious in this work and exacts a license. Let us define our terms, act in harmony with the law, and no true medium will hereafter be troubled.

Our Platform Speakers.

Our teachers upon the platform, both speakers and mediums, have done a good work during the past year. Many of them have served the Cause of Truth most devotedly and have everywhere exerted a healthful influence. They have uniformly spoken a good word for organization, and aided the N. S. A. by means of a timely word or suggestion. Some, however, have not been thus kind or generous. They have appealed to the N. S. A. for help in regard to ministerial rates and such other aid as would be of a personal benefit to them, and then refused to do one thing to support the N. S. A., or organization in any form. Such speakers and mediums have no use for the N. S. A. save what they can get out of it. I believe that something should be done by this intelligent body of delegates to correct this abuse. I recommend that all speakers and mediums having ordination papers endorsed by the N. S. A. be required to give one seance for its benefit, or one address to each society visited upon the aims and objects of the N. S. A., the proceeds thereof to accrue to the treasury of our National body. There is no general nor even local opposition to the N. S. A. in any section of the nation I have visited. There is a marked indifference to it and its welfare. It is to overcome this indifference on the part of the people that I recommend this campaign of education and financing as above outlined.

Our Mediums.

Our mediums are worthy of every possible consideration and kindly care at the hands of the Spiritualists of the nation, and particularly those of the N. S. A. Some mediums have been falsely led to believe that the N. S. A., as at present constituted, is opposed to them and their interests. A few of them have become its secret enemies, while others fight it in the open, because of this specious falsehood. The mediums have no truer friend in the world than the N. S. A. The work done in California and other states is ample evidence of the truth of this statement. The N. S. A. is not an enemy to any true medium, nor does it repudiate any phase of true mediumship. Both physical and psychical phenomena are recognized as facts by it, and all worthy mediums who present their splendid evidences of psychic power are protected by it. All physical mediums and others not speakers, who are engaged in psychic work, are recognized as associate ministers of Spiritualism, and, as such, are entitled to commissions from the N. S. A., setting forth this fact. No honest medium has been denied recognition up to date, under the present administration, and I trust no one ever will be in years to come.

Our usages, mistreated, badly emasculated, and deprived of real power in many ways as they were, yet retain a wise and just provision for all worthy mediums. I recommend that a copy of this provision of our Usages be placed in the hands of every medium in America whose address is at hand, by the incoming secretary, accompanied by a letter requesting the recipient to apply for a commission as Associate Minister under the N. S. A., when all provisions of that chapter have been met. It is a most lamentable fact that nine-tenths of the mediums do not belong to any local society, nor to any state association. When trouble comes upon them, they are not above seeking aid from the legally incorporated organizations in our movement. As a possible means of remedying this evil, I recommend that all speakers and mediums be requested to file their addresses at the office of the secretary of the N. S. A., and that letters be sent to them at frequent intervals, calling attention to the benefits they would derive from becoming members of local and state organizations.

The Fraud Question.

The question of fraud has been thoroughly and most energetically discussed in the columns of the secular and Spiritualistic press throughout the year, hence needs no special mention by me at this time. I am pleased to report that several battles have been fought and victories won for honest mediumship on the part of truth-loving Spiritualists. Every one of these contests has resulted in great good to our cause, and every exposure of fraud has redounded to our credit. I recommend the continuation of the policy of the past year and urge that extra vigilance be maintained all along the line to the end that only worthy mediums and genuine phenomena be exploited before the world.

Mr. J. R. Francis, the intrepid editor of The Progressive Thinker, has placed the Spiritualists of America under obligations to him by his splendid defense of honest mediumship, through the overthrow of the counterfeit. I recommend that suitable acknowledgment be made him for his noble work in this special field. I also recommend that the names and aliases of all traveling impostors, the "birds of passage" in mediumship, together with their photographs, so far as it is possible to obtain them, be filed with the secretary of the N. S. A., as a means of protection for our local societies and individual Spiritualists from the depredations of these conscienceless rascals now infesting our ranks.

The History of Spiritualism.

Again I urge this important subject upon the attention of the Spiritualists of America, and earnestly request you as delegates to do something to make it possible for our history to be brought down to date. Our pioneers are rapidly passing away from earth, and our records are too imperfect to make an authentic history possible without the positive evidence of those who led our movement in its early days. I am able to report progress in this field of effort, but that is all. Perhaps the report of our historian, Lyman C. Howe, will acquaint us with what has been done during the past few years, and reveal the pressing needs in his department for the year to come. I recommend that this subject be considered at length by this convention, and such action taken as will make it possible for the work to be carried on with greater rapidity hereafter.

The Pension Fund.

From the report of our honored secretary, you will learn what has been done through the mediumship of this worthy fund. I am able to report that monthly pensions have been paid to many of our veteran mediums and speakers throughout the past year. Without this aid, some of them would have suffered for food and clothing, and, perhaps a few of them would have become public charges. This department of the work of the N. S. A. is of vital importance to all Spiritualists, hence this Pension Fund should receive special attention at their hands. Through its instrumentality we are able to take care of our worthy needy ones, and to give temporary aid to many who are in trouble. I feel to recommend that this convention make the augmenting of this fund a special feature of its work. No worthier subject will be discussed upon this floor, and I trust that all of the energy that is being wasted in efforts to establish and endow useless "Mediums' Homes," as public institutions, will be turned into this healthier and far more helpful work. This pension fund is not one-hundredth as large as it should be, and if it had not been for the generosity of the large-hearted, whole-souled treasurer, Theodore J. Mayer, there would now be but few dollars to its credit. I recommend that every Spiritualist in America be urged to emulate Treasurer Mayer's noble example, to the end that this fund may become large enough to do the work for which it was designed.

Editor-at-Large.

The report of our energetic Editor-at-Large, Hudson Tuttle, will show you the splendid results of his labors during the past year. He is doing a most important work, and its influence is already manifest in the increased respect accorded Spiritualism and Spiritualists by reason of his fertile and vigorous pen. I recommend that this office be continued another year, and further urge that you, as delegates, re-elect Hudson Tuttle to the position he so worthily fills. He is making the N. S. A. a tower of strength to our cause as a whole, not only because of his thorough knowledge of Spiritualism, but also because of his ability to proclaim its principles in the columns of the secular press.

The Progressive Lyceum.

The report of the National Lyceum Superintendent, John W. Ring, will acquaint you with the results of his labors in this branch of N. S. A. work. This subject has never been given the consideration at our annual conventions that its importance demands. A full day at least should be assigned it. The Spiritualists of the future, who are to carry on this great work, must be born and grown, rather than converted. We welcome every convert, but when a person is steeped in Spiritualistic truth from infancy to manhood, he it is who knows what to do and how to do it. We are neglecting golden opportunities when we give the lyceum such scant consideration. It would be wiser to drop all N. S. A. work, save that of the Pension Fund than to keep the lyceum in such a minor, if not obscure place any longer. I recommend that the scope of lyceum work be enlarged, and that the entire time of the Superintendent be devoted to its unfoldment, with a living salary as compensation for his labors. Our present superintendent has done excellent work against heavy odds. With means at his command to work out his ideals, the lyceum will soon become a means of support to the N. S. A., and not a draft upon its treasury. Few persons know of the devotion of Supt. Ring to his duties, or realize the sacrifices he has made in behalf of this branch our work. He has labored early and late to build up the lyceum movement, yet has supported himself and family from his salary as pastor of the Spiritualist Church in Galveston. This should not be, hence I recommend corrective legislation. I ask that a full half day of this convention be assigned the lyceum question and Supt. Ring's report.

The Morris Pratt Institute.

No doubt the officers of this Institute will report to this convention the present status of the school, and the results of its labors during the past twelve months. Litigation was pending against it at the time of our last annual convention in St. Louis. All law suits have been settled in favor of the school, largely through the influence of the N. S. A., and the financial aid rendered by it. I look upon the Morris Pratt Institute as an important factor in Spiritualistic work. From the very nature of things it is almost a branch of the N. S. A., rather than one of its many auxiliaries.

The president of the N. S. A. will always be a member of the board of trustees of the school by virtue of his office. Our honored vice-president is one of the elected trustees of the school. The interests of the two bodies are similar, as both are educational in their purposes. I feel that the school is needed, and that it should be loyally sustained by the Spiritualists of America. I recommend that this convention take some action in behalf of the school, not in a financial way, but through the devising of some means by which the fortunes of the school may be advanced. I further recommend that the incoming president of the N. S. A. be required to attend all meetings of the board of trustees of the school at the expense of our National body, in order that the two associations may be kept in closer touch than they have been in the past in an official sense.

Our Usages.

My experiences during the past year have proved to me that a full set of Usages, including, of course, those pertaining to ordination, is a necessity. Frequent requests have been made for burial services and a service for the reception of candidates into a society. What few steps that have been taken in this direction were most timely, as all of our missionaries will testify, and the present Usages of Ordination have served us a good turn in not a few instances, both in a legal sense and that of securing rightful recognition of our worthy representatives. Personally, there is nothing in the Usages presented at the convention of 1903 to which I can take exception, but in view of the treatment accorded that Ritual last year in St. Louis, I feel to recommend that the document in its entirety be referred to a special committee with instructions to take from it such recommendations of ritualistic work as are really needed and requested by our people, to place the same in sequential order of form, and report them to this convention for action. Anyone who is acquainted with our field work, as is Missionary Sprague, will testify that our Ritual came none too soon, even in its present emasculated condition, and that there is need of completion of this work in all respects at the earliest possible opportunity.

Our Declaration of Principles.

I recommend that our Declaration of Principles, adopted at Chicago in 1899 and unanimously reaffirmed at every National convention since held, be amended by uniting Articles I. and II. as follows: "We, the Spiritualists of America, acknowledge Infinite Intelligence manifest in the phenomena of nature, both psychical and physical." I also recommend that the last Article of the Declaration be amended by adding the following words: "And that the new commandment 'Do all for others,' is the Diamond Rule revealed by Spiritualism as humanity's highest ideal in the sphere of duty."

Our Conventions.

I must call your attention to a fact that has long been apparent to every regular attendant at our conventions. We crowd too much into four days, and leave too much work undone, or refer it, inconsiderately, to the incoming board of trustees. It, therefore, follows that we do not have sufficient time in which to do our work. All other denominations consume all the way from eight days to a full month in their convention work. They give their committees ample time for the consideration of every question presented to them, and endeavor to obtain light upon all questions of moment by means of instructive essays from their representative men and women. I believe the time has come when the Spiritualists should emulate such a worthy example. I therefore recommend that the convention of 1906 open on the third Tuesday of October and close on the fourth Tuesday. This will give us seven working convention days, during which all of our work can be done decently and in order, all important questions debated upon their merits, and papers upon the various phases of Spiritualistic thought presented by our representative workers. At present, only four of our speakers can be heard at our conventions and then very hurriedly, and at best, only eight mediums can be given a hearing. By extending the time, we make our conventions not only business bodies, but also schools of instruction for all delegates and visitors and especially to our young speakers and mediums.

Convention Delegates.

I am convinced, after no little thought upon the subject, that only avowed Spiritualists, who are members of some local society or state association, should be eligible to seats as delegates to our annual conventions. I, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following By-law: "No person shall be seated as a delegate in the annual conventions of this association, who is not an avowed Spiritualist, and a member in good standing of some legally organized society of Spiritualists; nor shall any person be entitled to a seat as delegate who has, at any time within six years preceding the holding of a convention, renounced Spiritualism and denounced Spiritualists, either publicly or privately."

Clergy Rates.

The great trunk line Passenger Associations have continued to treat our clergymen with the same courtesy and consideration with which they have been honored ever since interchangeable annual permits were issued. Every representative worker, properly endorsed and having a clean record, has been granted a permit without question, and in no case, so far as my knowledge goes, has any Spiritualist been discriminated against by reason of his religious belief. I am also pleased to report that the standing of the N. S. A. with these four great railroad associations is of the highest order. I recommend the continuation of the careful, conservative policy of past years, on the part of the N. S. A. officers during the next twelve months. I also recommend that resolutions of thanks under the seal of the N S. A., signed by our president and secretary, be forwarded to James Charlton, Chairman Trans-Continental Passengor Association; Eben E McLeod, Chairman Western Passenger Association; F. C. Donald, Commissioner of the Central Passenger Association, all of Chicago, Ill., and J. E. Hannegan, Joint Agent Southwestern Passenger Association, St. Louis, Mo., for the many favors the N. S. A. has received at their hands, and for their courtesies to our clergymen.

Ordination.

I urge this subject upon your attention, and ask you to take some action by means of which future ordinations will be less numerous, and the violations of our usages less frequent. The desire to be ordained regardless of qualifications, and the itch on the part of certain officials to do the ordaining act, have become nuisances in our work. Something should be done to correct this evil. Our usages are explicit enough on this subject for all practical purposes, but thus far many societies know nothing about those usages being in effect, and some would-be speakers have never heard of the N. S. A., hence are ignorant of its ordination rites. As a possible remedy for the evils of ordination, I recommend that all persons ordained, otherwise than in accord with our usages since September 1, 1904, be denied recognition by our N. S. A. officials, and their names omitted from all clergy lists filed with the several railroad associations. I trust that this convention will, in its wisdom, strengthen the hands of its trustees by legislation of some sort upon this important question.

The Latest Word of Spiritualism.

At the Boston convention in 1902, Mr. C. D. Pruden, then an honored trustee of our National Association, secured the adoption of a most excellent resolution directing the president to appoint sundry persons among our speakers and mediums to prepare articles upon our phenomena, science, philosophy, and religion, from whose manuscripts there should be selected by him and the trustees of the N. S. A. such documents as presented Spiritualism's attitude on these several subjects in the clearest and most concise form, as well as ablest manner. This resolution was reaffirmed in 1903, and again in 1904, but its provisions have never been carried into effect, for which failure your present president is alone to blame. I recommend the re-affirmation of the Pruden resolution, plus positive instructions to the incoming president to attend to its provisions prior to Jan. 1, 1906.

Cuba and Porto Rico.

Our brethren in Cuba and Porto Rico are desirous of coming into closer relationship with the Spiritualists in North America. This also is true of our friends in Brazil and Chili, from which countries I have received letters to the above named effect. They ask for literature expository of our principles, and some of our Porto Rican friends are desirous of having a missionary sent to them. Of course this missionary must be able to speak the Spanish language. I have tried to find a speaker in our ranks with a knowledge of the Castilian tongue, but without success. I feel that we should meet our island and South American brethren half-way, and recommend that the incoming board of trustees be instructed to find a speaker with a knowledge of both Spanish and English, who can be sent to the Islands to undertake the work there. I was informed last winter in San Antonio, Texas, by a gentleman from San Juan, Porto Rico, that there were between sixty and seventy Spiritualist societies in Porto Rico alone. This is a splendid opportunity for some full trance medium or speaker to do a good work. He can use English in his normal state, and submit to the control of some eloquent excarnate Spanish orator in addressing our Spanish speaking brethren of the Antilles.

Postoffice Missions.

I recommend that the splendid work of our postoffice missions under the able management of our devoted secretary, be continued the coming year, and ask that such sums be appropriated for this work as will increase the output of tracts and other literature to meet the demands of the public. I recommend that the publication of tracts in the Spanish language be left to the discretion of the board of trustees.

Special Work in New England.

I feel to recommend that the incoming board of trustees be instructed to give special attention to New England during the coming year. I have found a loss of interest in the N. S. A. and its work in certain sections of New England, hence feel that something should be done to overcome this tendency. Some of our strongest auxiliaries have withdrawn from the N. S. A. during the past eighteen months, and the interest of many laymen seem to be waning in consequence. It is not that Spiritualism is on the decline in New England, but that interest in organization, local, state and National, seems to be on the wane. We should not neglect this important geographical division of our nation, from which, in the past, the N. S. A. has received so much numerical strength and financial support.

Camp-Meetings.

Our camps have been largely attended from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Through these important channels, the N. S. A. should reach thousands of people whose attention would not otherwise be called to the organization, and the nature of its work. Special days were granted the N. S. A. at Mineral Park Camp, Cal.; Onset, Mass.; Etna and Madison, Maine; Vicksburg, Mich., and a few other places from which your president has not received returns. The work done at the camps named justifies me in recommending that a special effort be made to secure a hearing at all of our camps next year. Some will refuse our request outright, others will not reply at all, while others will gladly assign the N. S. A. a place upon their programs, and do all in their power to aid the movement this association represents. I further recommend that special thanks be sent to Mrs. Nettie Howell of Los Angeles, Cal., Dr. Geo. A. Fuller of Onset, Mass., and to all camp managements who favored the N. S. A. this past season, for the assistance rendered the good cause this year.

Mass-Meetings.

No mass meetings have been held under the auspices of the N. S. A. during the past year. Numerous requests have been made to me for the holding of such meetings, but the expense of travel of mediums and speakers, plus the cost of their services, hall rent, music and advertising, was too great to warrant me in undertaking them. In past years, these meetings did the N. S. A. great good in the way of advertising, and yielded a goodly sum for its treasury, after the payment of all expenses. It would seem that they could again be made a staff of support to the N. S. A., hence I recommend that the incoming board of trustees be given positive instructions to institute and hold not more than ten of these gatherings in the large cities of the land, beginning in Portland, Maine, and working westward up to the opening of camp work next June.

A Psychic Quarterly.

Since the suspension of W. T. Stead's "Border Land," some years ago, from personal choice on his part, the field it occupied has been left wholly uncultivated. I feel to recommend that the feasibility of starting a similar quarterly in this country, not by the N. S. A., but under its auspices, be considered by this convention. I, therefore, recommend further that a special committee be appointed to consider this matter, and instructed to report before the final adjournment of this body.

Finance.

From the published reports of our secretary and treasurer, you have already learned what sums have been received and expended during the past year. You are also aware of the fact that there is a small balance of cash on hand. It is your duty during this convention to increase that balance to the largest possible proportions and to provide ways and means by which the income of the N. S. A. can be augmented during the coming ear. Dues, collections, donations, special bequests, etc., do not suffice to place the N. S. A. upon an independent financial footing. An endowment fund is needed and plans by which at least one hundred thousand dollars can be raised in the near future, should be adopted by you as delegates. The ephemeral character of many of local societies, convinces me that the N. S. A. is the one anchor of hope around which to rally our forces. It can be made the means by which our local bodies can be reformed and established upon a permanent basis. It will take an endowment fund to do this needed work. I therefore recommend that the committee on finance, ways and means, be instructed to present some plan of action by means of which this work can be carried forward to success. I further recommend that the question of appointing solicitors, under proper bonds, to collect money for such a fund, be considered by you as delegates. I respectfully request you to present such suggestions and methods of work as will tend to increase the finances of the N. S. A. in any way whatsoever. I recommend that special efforts be made to induce our wealthy Spiritualists to make their donations and bequests while in the form. The contests of the different wills that have been made in the past are warnings that we cannot afford to ignore. The chances are always against us and our cause whenever a will case goes before a jury. The present battle over the Goff will and the one that is about to come over the Crumbaugh will, the latter involving more than three hundred thousand dollars, are evidences that warrant me in urging our people to dispose of their property while they are alive.

The Spiritualist Press.

The N. S. A. is under special obligations to all of the Spiritualist journals in America for favors received. The official letters of our secretary, and, with one exception, those of your president, have been gratuitously published by our press from week to week, thereby rendering our association much efficient aid. I recommend that due acknowledgments be sent, under the seal of the N. S. A., to W. H. Bach of the Sunflower, John R. Francis of The Progressive Thinker, Willard J. Hull of the Light of Truth, and J. J. Morse of the Banner of Light.

Necrology.

Many of our leading laymen and platform workers have exchanged worlds during the past year. The list of names is too long to be cited here, but I do feel to specially mention the departure of J. Homer Altemus and Geo. A. Bacon of Washington, D. C., and Henry Slade of Reed City, Mich. The two former were loyal friends of the N. S. A., and earnest workers for the cause of Spiritualism. Henry Slade has been a pensioner of the N. S. A. for some years, but his name stood forth forty years ago as one of the greatest psychics the world ever knew. He made Spiritualism known in all quarters of the globe. Our committee on resolutions is hereby requested to note these names and asked to recall others less known to fame, yet worthy of remembrance, when preparing its report.

Our Vice-President.

All friends and supporters of true mediumship and a Spiritual Spiritualism are under obligations to our honored vice-president for his noble work and self-sacrificing zeal during the past year. No task has been too arduous, no duty too trying, for him to undertake. He has met every responsibility that has been placed upon his shoulders with conscientious fidelity, and has honestly and courageously proclaimed the result of his labors to the world. I desire to thank him for his good work and to acknowledge my many and lasting obligations to Vice-president Warne for the aid he has given me during the past year.

Our Secretary.

The work in the home office in Washington has been performed with conscientious fidelity by our faithful and hardworking secretary throughout the year. Everything has been done promptly and in a spirit of kindness and good-will. Nothing could be done by anyone to excel the splendid care and thoughtfulness of our secretary. Personally, your president is under many obligations to this true-hearted friend of our cause, to whom he takes pleasure in thus returning to her his most grateful thanks.

Theodore J. Mayer.

Our generous treasurer has again placed the Spiritualists of the world under obligations through his munificent donation of one thousand dollars to the Pension Fund. He deserves the gratitude and heartfelt thanks of every true Spiritualist on earth to-day. I Defense of the Lord Against His Maligners.

That was an interesting event in the history of the world when Joshua was engaged in a death struggle with the hosts of the five kings of the Amorites. The Lord was enlisted with Joshua, as we are told, Josh. 10:8, who instructed him not to fear, and slew the enemy with great slaughter, casting down great stones from heaven upon them" so that more died from the stones than Israel slew with the sword. But night was coming on and the killing was not finished, so, in obedience to Joshua's request of the Lord, "the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves on the enemy." Says the inerrant record: "So the sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down about a whole day."

The surface of the earth in its diurnal revolution moves forward more than 1,000 miles an hour. If stopped in its motion everything on its surface would be hurled forward. The waters of rivers, lakes, seas and oceans would leave their beds. Every tree would be torn from its root, and fly like feathers in a tornado. Rocks, like gossamer in the wind, would rush through the air, not visible because of their speed. Mountains would leave their base and roll on over continents. All life would be destroyed. Nothing could resist this forward precipitation of matter with the revolution of the earth stopped. The tornado sweeping over the plain at one hundred miles an hour prostrates everything. Multiply this force and velocity ten times and imagination cannot exaggerate the result; and this is just what would occur with the stoppage of the earth in its revolution.

But the grand display of Almighty power is recorded in II. Kings 20:11, when the Lord turned the dial of time back ten degrees. The effect of such an event would be double that when the earth was simply stopped in its revolution, equal to the impact of two bodies meeting, each moving with the velocity of a thousand miles an hour.

We are instructed, "God is the same yesterday, to-day and forever; that with him there is no variation or shadow of turning;" and yet how often are we told of his repenting that he made man; that he drowned the world to get rid of the productions of his own hand. It is time somebody should come to the defense of the Lord against his maligners; hence the reason The Progressive Thinker has assumed the task. The book recording these libels was priest-made. It reflects the narrow ideas of ignorance, and it is an outrage to allow it to repeat its barbarism without contradiction on a cultured age and on an enlightened people.

Deserves to Be Unfrocked.

The good sisters of St. Joseph's Episcopal church, Jersey City, have been in the habit for the last few months, during the absence of the rector, to dispense with their hats at church service. Rev. Dr. Stoddart, just returned from a long vacation in Europe, was shocked at the sight of his uncovered sisters, so he pretended to have found in the dictum of the bow-legged, hooked-nose bachelor, Paul, in I. Corinthians, chap. 7, the declaration: "The glory of a woman is her hair." Had there been such a text, which to the credit of Paul there is not, it would have proved that he ignored brains, intellect, modesty, chastity and philanthropy, as every other virtue, to glorify the hair, just as the great strength of Samson was ascribed to his hair instead of his muscles. Many a simpleton has sported long hair, hoping thereby to gain strength as did the Bible Hercules.

The passage the dominie misquoted will be found in I. Cor. 11:15:

"But if a woman have long hair, it is a glory to her; for her hair is given to her for a covering."

In saying "a woman's hair was given her for a covering," Paul certainly ignored any other covering.

The preachers have a habit of misquoting to carry some favorite measure, knowing the average church attendant will accept their false rendering without investigation.

Should the lawyer practice the same imposition on jurors, in quoting law, he would be disbarred by the judge, and justly. Should not a priest be unfrocked for a similar vile practice?

Hopeful Grief.

A Kansas paper tells the following touching incident

A preacher moved by the grief of a husband whose wife was about to be buried, sought to console the stricken one, so addressed him:

"My brother, I know this is a great grief that has overtaken you, and though you are compelled to mourn the loss of this one who was your companion and partner in life, I can cheer you with the assurance there is another who sympathizes with you and seeks to embrace you in the arms of unfailing love."

The bereaved gazed through falling tears into the holy man's face, and inquired: "What's her name?"

Paganism and Christianity.

One who is well read in the popular Christian literature, and has absorbed its teachings thoroughly, will almost inevitably have the idea that there is a vast difference between the ethics of what is called Paganism and what is called Christianity.

As a matter of fact, ethics is ethics, whether labeled Christian or Pagan, or not labeled at all.

Hence it need occasion no shock of surprise to be informed of the fact that the best statements and examples of ethics, Pagan and Christian, are really quite harmonious.

By way of an example of Paganism we may refer to Japan, which is called a Pagan country, by Christian peoples. In the religious literature of Japan will be found as high and pure ethical ideals as the highest Christian civilization can boast; and certainly the Japanese exemplification of ethics during the recent war and since, puts to shame the actual practical ethics of Christendom.

It must be seen that, contrary to common Christian opinion, Paganism does by no means mean barbarism. In the realm of thought there were Pagans in the days of Rome and Greece who would outshine the most cultured Christian thinkers of to-day; and there were examples of spirituality among them that the best of present-day Christians might well emulate. What a similarity there is between the best ideal of Christ and the best ideal of Buddha. In this aspect there is a wonderful oneness of spirit between these personages. Both arrived at a high moral and spiritual altitude; both reach the acme of tender love for humanity.

Let it be understood that this estimate of the Christ is founded upon those parts of the purported gospels which display the tender and humanity-loving elements of the Christ; it must be admitted that other parts of the records as we have them are widely at variance with this view. And it must be said that the professed Christian peoples have well exemplified the contradictory nature of the reputed gospel records, for the history of Christianity has been a history of beneficent works, and of frightful human wars, hatred, dissensions, slaughters, persecutions, even to the ignoring of the human bonds of family relationships.

On the other hand, Buddha and his followers have been teachers and exemplars of peace—shedding blood only when forced by the aggressions of the fighting type of Christianity. The burden of the world's unhappiness so pressed upon the spirit of Buddha that he forsook his father's palace, tore himself away from family and friends, going out into the dreary world as a beggar, that he might find a cure for humanity's sorrows and ills. All of his acts and words indicated tenderness of heart, and deepest sympathy for mankind.

If the Christ was divine, was not Buddha divine also? War and bloodshed never flowed from his example and precepts.

And yet, Buddha is called a Pagan.

Efficacy of Prayer.

The utility of prayer is well illustrated in the story of the little girl who was pained because her brother was setting traps to catch birds. Questioned as to what she had done to prevent his success, she said, she prayed that he might not catch the birds; then she asked God to prevent the birds getting into the traps.

"Anything else?" was the inquiry.

"Yes, I went and kicked the traps all to pieces"

Was it not the last act which saved the birds?

Sambo's experience was along the same line. He said he might pray a week for a turkey gobbler and not be successful, but when he went himself for one, he was sure to get it before morning.

The old Romans had an axiom along the same line: "Jupiter helps those who help themselves."

The ship in the stress of a storm is not saved by prayer, but by the skill and labor of the seaman, he who stands at the wheel and guides the vessel's course, and they who reef the sails, close the hatch, and keep the ship properly ballasted until the winds and the waves have spent their force. The prayers of a thousand Moodys would be of no avail if Jack Tar imitated them, and dropped on his knees in prayer while the tempest raged.

MRS. DR. CAIRD.

They Regard Her as an Excellent Medium—Remarkable Results in the Developing Circle.

To the Editor:—I wish to thank you for recommending Mrs. Dr. Caird to us, and to state that we were very fortunate in procuring her services; we are elated over the results she has obtained, and think her a remarkable medium.

She has developed us to where we can get physical manifestations, just what we were so anxious to receive, and I think that you will hear from Belvidere in the near future in regard to Spiritualism. F. W. CRAIN.

"VENGEANCE, GOD, IS THINE."

When Bishop Cox of Western New York, wrote a number of years ago a fiery war poem, a peace poet connected with the secular press thus rebuked him:

"Thou man of God who thus implore—
Thy brother's sacred blood to pour
In hateful tides of turbid gore
From Dardanelles to Danube's shore,
Be still—be still!
Blaspheme no more!

"God help the babes! God bless the wives!
Shame on the priests that whet the knives!
Shame on the church whose altar thrives
By wrecking peaceful peasants' lives!
Be still—be still!
'Tis hell that drives!

"How long, O Lord, before thy shrine
Shall men pray, 'Vengeance, God, is thine,'
Then worship Moloch as divine,
And drink the battle's bloody wine?
Be still—be still!
O heart of mine!"

Orient Teaching Occident.

Some unforeseen yet very interesting and important results have been produced by the Russo-Japanese war. Because of the triumph of Japanese arms, the thought is quite naturally taking hold of the Oriental mind that their "heathenism"—as we call it—has in it the power and elements to progress to the very highest practical and material standard reached by Christian peoples, and even go beyond them, without the aid of the Christian religion.

The triumph of Japan, a "heathen" nation, over one of the foremost "Christian" nations of the world, is an apparent demonstration that "heathenism" is in fact superior to christianity its missionaries.

It is said that thousands of Chinese students trained in Japanese schools, and imbued with this new thought, are returning to China to propagate the new idea, and as a result there is a growing contempt for Christianity and missionaries.

At the same time and concurrently with this movement of thought in the Oriental mind, appears in the Occident a new idea of the value of the religions of the Orient—also a result of the same war in the East.

In a paper in the London Fortnightly Review, Mr. William S. Lilly discusses the subject in treating of "The Message of Buddhism to the Western World."

This new phase of development in modern thought, Oriental and Occidental, is attracting the attention of philosophic thinkers, as well it may.

The New York Sun in a recent issue says:

The old conception was that outside of Christendom and among two-thirds of the human race there was only gross religious darkness; but now Christendom is giving respectful consideration to those other religions. It is beginning to study their merits relatively to Christianity, with a view to discovering if they have any lesson of superiority to convey to Christendom. That is, Christianity is no longer treated as the only true and the one supreme religion the propagation of which is necessary for the salvation of the world.

We shall not undertake to follow Mr. Lilly's exposition of the spirit and doctrine of Buddhism particularly, but will simply refer to his conclusion respecting its lesson for the Western world. It is that in this period when the Western intellect has "cast off the Christian mythology," the teaching of Buddha offers an "infinitely wiser, sweeter and more ennobling doctrine" than that of the now "unhappily predominant school among us which makes happiness; or agreeable feeling, the formal constituent of virtue, and seeks to deduce the laws of conduct from the laws of comfort"; so that "not the intention of the doer, but the result of the deed" is made the "test of the ethical value of the act." This school, therefore, is practically without moral guidance.

Like our modern science, Buddhism discards the theory of the "soul" in man and teaches that "man has no knowledge of an Infinite and Absolute Being"; that "law rules everywhere throughout the phenomenal universe"; but it teaches also that in the ethical and spiritual sphere is an order which is the counterpart of that law—a law of righteousness, with its moral retribution, which abides forever. Thus would Buddhism furnish the guide to the light of "Gnosis" from the darkness and hopelessness of Agnosticism.

The late Mr. Lafcadio Hearn predicted that "out of the certain future union of Western knowledge with Eastern thought there must eventually proceed a neo-Buddhism, which, embracing all the strength of science, is yet spiritually able to recompense the seeker after truth." Similar confidence seems now to have entered into the mind of the Buddhist world. After a thousand years of cessation from propagandism it has waked up at last to the notion that its mission is to reform the Western world, not merely to stand impassive against Christian propaganda. In Japan, Ceylon and Burmah the Buddhist clergy are embarrassing missionaries with criticisms of Christianity, and schools and societies and publications for expounding Buddhism are multiplied. At Rangoon a very able magazine has been established to assist in the propaganda.

Of course, the Confucian philosophy is the form of religious thought of which this Christian missionary in China was speaking specifically, but its present tendency to more contemptuous regard of Christianity is another of the manifestations of the Oriental revolt against the religious propaganda of the West. As Christendom abandons its old faith the Oriental world is the more convinced of the superiority of its own moral and religious systems.

This is a very radical overturning. Practically it was not started until within the last generation, and its now more rapid movement, due to the progress of Japan in the last ten years, will be still further accelerated by the triumph over Russia. The war was conducted by that "heathen" people with a tender regard for every human precept taught in the Gospels, but never fulfilled in Christendom so completely. The moderation of Japan in its peace terms, evincing a spirit of practical Christianity not taught in the experience of Christian nations, has gained for it recognition and applause as in many respects the most enlightened Power of the world.

Is it any wonder, then, that the Christian missionary in China looks with misgiving on this splendid demonstration of Japanese propagandism in the East? Is the West to ask Japan to sit at its feet as a teacher of civilization, or is the West to assume the humble position of pupil? Veritably, a "new idea" has entered into the world of the Occident no less than of the Orient.

Will Not Cast Off Forever.

The Lamentations of Jeremiah, the twenty-fifth book in the Bible, is reputed very high authority by Christians, and of course all who reject the teaching of this superior prophet, who was inspired of God to reveal his will to man, unless the preachers misrepresent, must be counted among unbelievers. Turn, good reader, you who have been all your lifetime in bondage from fear of an endless hell, and read Lamentations 3: 31, 32, 33—

"The Lord will not cast off forever; though he cause grief yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies; for he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men."

"Go to," Billy Sunday, and all who preach an endless hell to frighten the thoughtless and the ignorant into the church. Here is an antidote, and a "thus saith the Lord" for the poisons hurled from your coward castles at the people who listen to your silly threatenings.

Stirring Times

the Coming Year.

The coming year will be fraught with great and stirring events, and The Progressive Thinker will be the leader in connection with the same. Graft, in one of its many forms, has entered the ranks of Spiritualism, as it has in the insurance companies, in municipal government, in the adulteration of food, in politics, in religion—in fact it seems to have entered into many branches of life where dollars are concerned. Some of the Spiritualist camps--particularly Chesterfield--have been dominated by fakes and tricksters, and there will be an upheaval the coming year all along the line, and revelations made that will astonish you. Fakes and tricksters must go. Honest mediums must be protected and sustained. Send in your subscriptions at once, with an additional subscriber, and thus aid The Progressive Thinker in its efforts to sustain a Pure Spiritualism and an Honest Mediumship.

The National Spiritualists Association.

Annual Report of the Secretary, Mrs. Mary T. Longley.

To the National Spiritualists' Association of America, Greeting—Mr. President and Co-Workers in the Spiritual Cause:—It gives me much pleasure to herewith submit to you the annual report of your secretary for the year ending September 30, 1905.

The work of the year at the Home Office in Washington, D. C., has progressed as usual; the influence of our organization has been far-reaching, extending to the remotest boundaries of this country and in some instances, through correspondence, to countries across the sea. The mass of evidence, from individuals and societies, of the good work that has been wrought and is being done by the various departments of the N. S. A., for the blessing of humanity, that has collected at our office, is both encouraging to your board of trustees and of itself sufficient answer to the query made in some quarters as to the usefulness and need of the N. S. A.

During the year just closed, your secretary has written and sent forth to individuals and societies nearly two thousand letters upon many subjects germain to the cause of Spiritualism and to the work of organized bodies; in addition she has forwarded quarterly circular letters to our chartered bodies, state and local, also frequent communications to the spiritual papers for publication, distributed the usual literature through its proper channels and received a large number of visitors at the Home Office from far and near. In all instances she has received the utmost of courtesy and fair dealing from private and public workers, investigators and even from skeptics, and has only to say that, human nature being the same everywhere, one has only to extend courtesy to receive it in return.

During the year the N. S. A. has granted but eleven charters, all to local societies—one each in St. Louis, Mo., Newburyport, Mass., Bradford, Pa., Sheridan, Wyo., Grand Junction, Leadville and Denver, Colo., and two in Louisville, Ky., one in Salem, Mass., and one in Jersey City, N. J. The latter society was organized and chartered by our missionary-at-large, Rev. H. C. Dorn of Newark, N. J.; most of the other ten societies were organized by our special missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Sprague. But this list of societies by no means comprises the number of associations for Spiritualism that have been organized by our missionaries, for they have labored in many states where state associations exist, and have organized societies within such localities, getting them chartered with their respective state associations, thus strengthening the cause in their sections, increasing the influence of the state associations and also assisting the National Association.

Several societies have withdrawn from direct affiliation with the National by joining their state associations—this the N. S. A. endorses and recommends. The First Spiritual society of Lynn, Mass., has withdrawn and we are glad to report that the Massachusetts State Association, by its president and members, has pledged its fealty anew to the N. S. A. in most loyal and emphatic terms. The N. S. A. has a large number of local societies in the "Old Bay State," as well as in other parts of New England, all of which are full of loyalty to the cause and to this organization.

We report the Rhode Island State Association as inert, if not wholly defunct; all other state associations are reported active and full of zeal for the cause, also in good standing with the N. S. A. We have, up to October 1, about one hundred and twenty local societies in good standing, but as many societies annually pay up their arrears at convention and wheel into line, our present report can not possibly give adequate list of our auxiliaries that are in spirit loyal and in readiness to discharge all their indebtedness to this association.

Our Financial Standing as an Association, is by no means discouraging. The annual financial reports of treasurer and secretary, copies of which will be in the hands of each delegate at convention, will show our condition in money, and we believe it will win the approval of all candid minds.

Our receipts from societies have not been large, and individual donations have been confined principally to the Mediums' Relief Fund, than which no better or more important fund and work exists among Spiritualists. We have received, however, financial increase from other sources, namely, $4,745.25 from the bequest of our arisen brother and friend, S. W. Tucker of Keokuk, Iowa—the bequest was of five thousand dollars, but the amount of inheritance tax charged by the state of Iowa, was of course deducted from the same; and the sum of $498.25, for the sale of a tract of land in Scott county, Kans., formerly donated to the N. S. A. by our Mr. J. B. Munger, of Macomb, Ill.

By the unfailing help and generosity of our noble treasurer, Mr. T. J. Mayer, the Mediums' Relief Fund also received a most valuable addition. In the recent spring, Mr. Mayer caused your secretary to issue a call to the public, through the spiritual papers, and by correspondence with societies and individuals, for a collection of one thousand dollars for the Mediums' Fund, he promising to give personally another thousand if the first was raised. After much pleading on the part of all concerned, including our faithful editors of the Spiritualist papers, more than the sum asked for was raised—or about thirteen hundred dollars, which with the thousand from our good treasurer, added twenty-three hundred dollars to the Mediums' Fund. This, however, was a very necessary benefaction, for unless frequent additions of considerable amount are made to the Relief Fund, it will be but a matter of comparatively brief time, before our worthy beneficiaries will be cast back to the cold realms of poverty and want, since with even the few regular pensioners on our list we are paying out fifteen hundred a year in addition to frequent appropriations of twenty or more dollars for temporary aid to the deserving mediums who find themselves suddenly ill or stranded in some financial way.

We have now the following regular pensioners on our list, all well known and trusted workers for the spiritual cause, all aged and worn out in the work, unable to do much for pecuniary return: Dr. Dean Clarke, Mrs. E. Cutler, Mrs. A. Angell, Mrs. M. E. W. Wright, Mrs. Annie Lord Chamberlain, also her blind sister, Jennie Lord Webb, Abram James, Belle Bush, Mr. and Mrs. Jaqua, Lyman C. Howe. The sum of twelve dollars per month may not be a great deal for a human being to live on, yet our beneficiaries are grateful and happy that the N. S. A. is also glad that it has undertaken this good work. To all criticism from individuals who occasionally offer advice, but never donate a cent towards our good work, your secretary desires to say that we have investigated every case on our pension list and know it to be both genuine and worthy, and we feel that the little that we or the public can do towards helping the aged and crippled workers of the past to spend their declining days in peace is by no means too much—nor half enough. The N. S. A. desires to add to its list of beneficiaries and will do so as means allow; there are plenty of worthy candidates for a place on the list and we shall be only too glad to aid them as soon as possible.

Within the year the following pensioners have passed to the spirit world: Mrs. Tryphena C. Pardee, Dr. B. Franklin Clarke, and Dr. Henry Slade; the N. S. A. attended to the funeral expense of each of these veterans and our duty has been well discharged. Our pensioners are not confined to any one locality, but are scattered from the far East to the Pacific slope. It is the same with those who have received temporary aid—all sections are helped from the relief fund as far as it goes—to give even temporary aid to all would be to impoverish the fund and cast those dependent upon it out in the cold world to suffer.

Camps.

Your secretary entered into correspondence early in the season with the officers of our various camp associations soliciting a special N. S. A. day at their respective summer resorts; with the result that several granted the same, and we received thereby collections varying from four dollars to one hundred from such work. The latter sum was obtained at Onset camp, where your secretary represented this National Association on August 19; the other camps were enabled to give but small sums, but the sincere and appreciative thanks of the N. S. A. have been officially tendered to each one.

Law Suits and Will Contest Cases.

The law suit of the Morris Pratt Institute Association with certain heirs of the Morris Pratt estate, has been reported as settled in favor of the college and our cause; the N. S. A. contributed the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars towards the suit in behalf of the college as directed by the convention of 1904.

The will of Mr. Goff of Lansing, Mich., in which he bequeathed a large sum to the Michigan State Association, for the maintenance of a Mediums' Home and other good work, has been contested by certain interested parties; the Michigan State Association carried on the case as long as possible without help, then called on the N. S. A. for aid which has been freely granted, the National Association and the Michigan State Association entering upon an agreement to carry the case to the Supreme Court. This case is still pending and final report cannot be given upon it.

Matters connected with charges, accusations and inharmonies in and between certain auxiliaries have been investigated and adjusted as far as possible by the N. S. A., and in every instance your trustees have acted in the spirit of fairness, justice and good-will towards all.

Editor-at-Large.

Mr. Hudson Tuttle, editor-at-large for the N. S. A., will send his own annual report to convention. His frequent reports during the year to headquarters show that he has kept faithfully to his work and that his pen and influence have done very much towards increasing the growing respect of the world towards our sacred cause.

Our Missionaries.

President Barrett and Mr. and Mrs. Sprague as special representatives in various parts of the country have done grand work for the cause at large. Words cannot estimate the power for good they have wrought; their respective reports will, however, give some idea of their sacrifices and of their labors for humanity.

General Superintendent of Lyceums, John W. Ring, also gives good reports of his work and influence for the lyceums; he has accomplished great good and deserves your commendation and a general hearing. He will speak for himself at this convention.

Our Free Circulating Library at Washington, is in good condition. It comprises about seven hundred volumes of standard spiritual works. Many of these books are constantly out on loan and great good is being accomplished by this branch of our work. The distribution of spiritual tracts goes steadily on from headquarters; thousands are sent out every month; they go in all directions; no one calls for them in vain, though the bill for postage on these gratuitous distributions is considerable each year.

During the winter of 1904-1905, it was suggested that your secretary send out from headquarters in the name of the N. S. A., an appeal to the governor of Pennsylvania for clemency in the case of Mrs. Kate Edwards, sentenced to capital punishment in his state, also a like plea to the governor of Vermont in behalf of Mrs. Mary Rogers, under similar sentence. This was done, and courteous replies were received in each instance. Whether our appeal had any appreciable effect in the reprieve granted to each of these criminals or not, we cannot say, but at least the N. S. A. put itself on record in each case as opposed to capital punishment.

Our president and board of trustees have worked in harmony and zeal for the good of our cause and the increase of the usefulness of the N. S. A. Your secretary desires here to publicly acknowledge her indebtedness to each one for their kind and willing co-operation and aid in any duty or work that she has had in hand which needed the counsel of our board. Her thanks are extended to each one—to our president for his never-failing helpfulness and advice; to our treasurer who is a host in himself, for counsel and consideration, as to each member of our band; she also desires to acknowledge the constant aid of Mr. C. P. Longley in mailing and other work incidental to office life, and the faithful assistance of Mrs. Agnes Wing Fugitt, which has been invaluable in many ways.

In addition to other duties, your secretary has attended funerals where the spiritual word was needed, this as a labor of love for the cause and as part of her ministry for the N. S. A. Such work has extended as far as possible according to her health and the duties devolving upon her.

And just here, dear friends, it may be fitting to say a word concerning the bereavements which have entered the heart life of our dear president and his beloved wife. At a time when he was far from home in the pursuance of missionary labors, and while his dear companion lay in deep illness, the death angel came almost simultaneously into the home of his cherished parents, summoning the father of our president to the higher life, and also to the home itself of Mr. and Mrs. Barrett, calling their lovely babe to the immortal sphere. The anguish and pain thus brought into the lives of these devoted workers cannot be described in speech, and I ask this convention to tenderly and reverently in a moment of silent prayer, unitedly extend our condolence and sympathy to our president and his companion.

Before closing this report, I desire to call your attention to the editors of our spiritual papers. They have never failed to aid the N. S. A. in every possible way; their columns have been opened to our appeals and reports; they have given every opportunity to this association to keep its good objects before the world and to set itself right if in any way its work was questioned or misunderstood. We cannot begin to estimate the good which the spiritual press has done for the N. S. A., and more than all for the cause of Spiritualism, and I recommend that a unanimous vote of thanks be given by this convention to The Progressive Thinker, the Banner of Light, Sunflower, Light of Truth, and all other spiritual publications that have in any way assisted this association in its work for humanity.

And now, Mr. President and Delegates, the year of work at the headquarters has drawn to a close. While there have inevitably been some shadows during its passage, yet we feel that the greater part of the way and the work has been cheerful and encouraging to all connected therewith. Your secretary submits this report to you with the knowledge that she and all her co-laborers on the board and in the field of society work have done what they could for the interest of human progress and enlightenment.

Respectfully submitted,
MARY T. LONGLEY,
Secretary.

THEO. J. MAYER, Treas. N. S. A.

Child Legislation.

Various waves of activity have engaged the attention of women from time to time. The years preceding the Civil War marked an era of agitation against slave-holding; the war itself created organizations for the benefit of the soldier; a great wave of temperance enthusiasm swept over the land about the same time that foreign missions became a department of church work in all denominations, and this was followed by the inauguration and development of various organizations to protect domestic animals, fishes, wild animals, forests, and lastly human beings. The crest of each successive wave has planted the standard of humanitarianism just a little higher than it was before.

The largest number of women's associations organized in the last twenty years have for their main endeavor the securing to children certain rights—their right to pure food, air and water; their right to playgrounds; their right to an education unhampered by toil; also to securing legislation safeguarding the child at work; the regulation of factory hours, factory accommodations, night work, dangerous occupations, requirements, and sanitary conditions. The child labor law has gone hand in hand with compulsory school law in most of the states to raise the standard of child life, physically, mentally and morally to the plane of our ideal civilization.

Because of what has been accomplished along these lines the unthinking observer is prone to feel complacent and wonder why we should be dissatisfied or want to accomplish larger and better things for posterity, never taking into consideration that waves simply flow along the channel of least resistance and that deeper currents of thought will rise to the surface of public sentiment. Many a legislator declines proposing a bill that would violently antagonize his wealthy manufacturing constituent, while his vote is easily obtained in support of a bill forbidding little children to peddle papers and chewing gum on the streets, or to take check reins off working horses; cheap popularity is easy in a law that is so general the individual is lost sight of in its operation.

So the women have gone on year after year presenting memorials to Congress asking largely and accepting such victory as rewarded their efforts, while patiently studying defeat to learn better how to attain the end desired. And year after year the ranks of suffragists are increased by these women who have had a practical object lesson of how the beautiful "indirect influence" of women works on the voter and secures legislation.

ITEMS FROM COLUMBUS, OHIO.

Mrs. Marian Carpenter and Her Work—Miss Elizabeth Harlow, of National Reputation—Mrs. Skeills and Her Poems.

To the Editor:—Columbus, Ohio, is now, and has been for some time, especially favored with excellent talent. For a few weeks in September, the East Side Society had Mrs. Marian Carpenter of Detroit, Mich. Her lectures are given while entranced, and are usually closed with a soul-uplifting song. She is also a good platform messagebearer. She is certainly a woman of great purity of soul.

We have back with us for the winter—for the third time—Miss Elizabeth Harlow, a speaker with a national reputation. Her inspirers are both scientific and philosophical. From their point of view, Spiritualism has more to do with life in this stage of existence than with the sweet bye and bye; hence the discourses are more frequently on lines and measures which if carried out would bring heaven here now.

The West Side Society has for the present month a lady from your own state, a Mrs. Margaret Skeills. This is the third season that she has been with them. When on the platform she is deeply entranced. Frequently the entire subject matter of the discourse of an hour's length is given in poetry—that would do credit to any of our best poets.

One peculiar feature with her, she will sometimes stop in the midst of her address, and give a poetic message to some one in the audience, and then resume her discourse. It is character possessed by these grand ladies I have mentioned that gives prestige to our cause. WALLACE H. MOORE.

MR. SUNSHINE.

Good morning, Mr. Sunshine,
Glad to see you here,
The night was rather gloomy,
But now that you appear
The world is full of brightness
And happiness and cheer.

Good morning, Mr. Sunshine,
Night has hurried on,
We find you're very welcome
When you come at dawn,
I guess you know we miss you
When your light is gone.

Good morning, Mr. Sunshine,
Hope we see you well;
You're looking mighty cheerful
Shadows now dispel;
You please us every morning
Far more than we can tell.

ADJUSTING ONESELF TO THE UNIVERSE.

Discourse Through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Chicago, October 1, 1905.

"Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?

"If I ascend up to heaven thou art there; if I make my bed in hell behold, thou art there.

"If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me."

Whether in hell or heaven, whether on earth or in any other planet, what does it matter, if one knows the Center, the Supreme Power?

Formerly, in the dark ages, astronomy failed because people made this little, small Earth the center of the solar system. They could not calculate the eclipses; they could not tell about the other planets; they were at a loss to understand. But just as soon as with the eye of mathematics—the only accurate material science—they discovered that the sun is the center, as soon as they discovered that all these stars revolved around the sun, instead of the sun, moon and stars revolving around the Earth, their calculations became more accurate, almost perfect; and when by the observation of that which is known as the precession of the equinoxes they found there was another, more distant center, they then became still more accurate because they could make mathematical allowances for the rotations of the solar system around that more distant center.

Difficulties in Adjustment.

So whenever one makes oneself the center of the universe there will be stone walls here and obstacles there, unexpected eclipses and storms that one does not know how to meet. Whenever you think the universe is doing something to you instead of for you, you will struggle and complain. It is this doing to you that constitutes the great difficulty of adjustment here. "Why did it storm to-day when I wanted to go to church?" "Why do people have to do this or that or the other thing just to interfere with me?" "Why is somebody born, or why does somebody die, just to punish me?" "Why was my child blind, or this one crippled, or that one something else, just to make me more trouble?" Of course this attitude not only sees everything that is shadowy, but invites the shadows; goes out to meet them, rushes hither and thither to find difficulties, that "other people" are always creating.

Just as soon as you begin to understand that you cannot get out of the universe if you try, you will make up your minds to be reconciled to your environment and make the best of it wherever you may be, and know, that when it is time you will take the next step.

Most people are like babies. Of course the baby starts to go to a place in opposite side of the room, and goes, according to nature, in a straight line, never noticing the stool or chair that is in the way. Of course the baby falls. If it is a grown-up baby, "somebody put them there for people to stumble over." Then the baby, like the grown-up baby, begins to reason, the baby must learn to climb next time. Then before the baby begins to build roadways—another state of physical expression—the baby just knows the next best thing is to climb over the barriers. The primal men are good climbers, they go over the hills instead of around them; they do not hesitate to use their feet. It is only after they begin to build roadways—another stage of complex growth—that they go around the obstacle, and do not climb. Undoubtedly when people return to the primal conditions of the soul they will find that the obstacles are there to surmount. It is a part of the development of the small babe to climb. If there is a flight of stairs anywhere the baby will find it. You have to put up a great many barriers to keep the baby from climbing; even if it has a tumble or two it does not make any difference, the baby will climb. The great secret of life is, that all people wish to climb; they all want to gain something that seems inaccessible, yet if this or that, or the other barrier intervenes they think somebody put it there purposely to hinder them. How do you know but what it is true, to make it necessary for them to climb?

Then people seem to think that somebody is always trying to do something against them. Sometimes people have natures that are suspicious, and they think this one or that one who has been a friend is always doing something against them. Now the chances are nine to one, or ninety-nine to one they are not thinking anything about the suspicious ones at all. Of course this is not very gratifying to their vanity or self-esteem. But people usually do not go out of their way to do harmful things to other people, except when they want to "hold them up" to get their money, or for some influence they want to compel them to bring for some purpose. It is only through revenge, which is very rare, or some selfish motive that people take the trouble to go out of their way to do anything to you.

For the most part the universe is not doing anything to you. The stars will go on, the earth will revolve, earthquakes in South America and in the Sandwich Islands, or in Italy or in Greece will shock the earth and swallow up cities; Mount Vesuvius will not be stilled for all that the Church of Rome, and all the other churches in the world can do. The universe is adjusted to the universal law and methods. All may be one with that law, all may be one with the things that are adjusted to that law. But you or we cannot fight the universe single-handed. We are a part of it, and that is the sublime beauty of the situation. We only have charge over our ego and thought, not fully over all the environment, still the possession of the entity is ours, but we cannot flounce out of the universe because we are offended; and we cannot flounce back again because we wish again to enter the universe. We are held by that which is like unto ourselves. The part that is like the dust is held by the laws that govern the dust; the part that is like the Intelligence of the universe is held by that Intelligence. We did not decide to go some other way when we found out that the world was moving on its axis. But while we can do that in our airships and by our motor powers, we do not decide that we shall have some other laws than those that govern the mechanism of the world.

We know there are other forces in the human intelligence that, not only can co-operate with nature, but, if we take that part of the universe rightly, we believe the soul can transcend physical nature. We can never exceed material law except by a knowledge of the power of the spirit; and that is governed in its own realm by forces that belong to the spirit. When we are one with God in the universe that belongs to God we shall be adjusted. Now, of course, all laws of chemistry, all discoveries of men like Edison, all explorations in the realm of material science are but adaptations to the laws that govern the material universe. If we go counter to the winds we go there by principles that can be mathematically calculated; if we row up stream we take into account the strength of the current, if the wind is against us too, we take that into account. We do not think that either the winds nor the currents of the stream are placed there just to baffle us. In this realm of the material universe the greater the mind the greater the control over the elements. This is because the mind is adjusted to know that one must act in conformity with the great purposes of nature. The aim of science is not to overcome those purposes, not to set them aside, but to work in harmony with them to the end that every tempest shall be our pinion, every storm our source of strength.

We pray for rain; yet when the deluge comes we are scarcely prepared for it. We pray for the purifying pinions of the winds; yet the tornado and the cyclone seem to baffle us. We pray that all the forces of nature may bring an abundant harvest to our doors and ships to our harbors with the freightage of the world—or a part of it—but we forget that the harvest of the fields and the freightage of all the world are not the sole objects of nature. This man's wheat or that man's vineyard are not the only propositions of the summer time. The reason people cannot better govern the elements to-day is that people look upon the universe from the narrow standpoint of personal selfishness. "Now I want rain," says one man. But he does not know about the man over there—he may not want it. One man says, "I want this or that or the other kind of weather," but he does not think of the other man over there who may not want the same kind of weather. Now one can have rain and another sunshine just as soon as people adapt themselves to the methods that the universe employs. When you know the methods that nature employs to get up a storm, you can have one. Most of you can have a domestic cyclone at any time. But the elements seem to baffle you.

The truth is, the collection of the necessary amount of vapor to produce rain is only a question of further knowledge of the methods of the universe; and all the study in a scientific direction along such lines will bring its fruitful results as soon as people are ready. But the people are not ready. The great intellect of man requires years to arrive at the knowledge of the spirit. This spirituality has been forgotten; it has been either cloistered in the theology of the churches of the world and never used, or it has fallen upon the quicksands and rocks of materialism. The spirit of man must be more and more unfolded to meet the demands of the human being in adapting himself or herself to the universe.

How often people feel like aliens, how often they feel like orphans, how often they feel as though they had wandered far from the Father's house, and from their kindred, and do not know how to retrace their steps. Fortunately you do not have to retrace your steps from the road however winding, or however deep and dark the valley, it leads to God and to the soul. You cannot be lost in the jungle, you cannot be lost on ships at sea, you cannot be lost anywhere. Therefore wherever you are you can adapt yourself to the universe of things and to the Infinite. Because it is but a step from things to the greater realities.

Alexander Selkirk (or Robinson Crusoe), the tale of your boyhood and your grandfather's boyhood, was an illustration of man's adaptation to nature, of making the best of things. If he had had little larger gleams into the spirit, if the great universe of intelligence had been open to him, that particular human life would not have been of so much consequence. And the knowledge comes when still supposing all these things fail; supposing your work fails; supposing your life fails; supposing the strain of material life is broken, you are not out of the universe, you are not out of your soul, you are not away from God. The universe holds all the propositions that you need; holds everything you want to know or want to understand. It is only a question of your arrival, of being ready.

Now as the baby, the little girl and boy, can ask a great many questions that cannot be answered until they are grown up; and then they ask a great many questions that seem to be unanswered, but the answer is there. The trouble with people is, they want the answer before they are ready. They do not know what they want. A great many people say when they have an opportunity to ask questions, the most difficult thing is to know what to ask and how to formulate the question. To a person who can intelligently ask a question and understand it, the answer is not far away.

Then people say: "Oh, if I have done my best I do not see why this or that or the other calamity should befall me." Thousands, and thousands and thousands of people do their best and still things do seem to befall them. The meaning of this is, not that they are singled out as exceptions for that thing to happen to, but that it is a part of the plan and purpose of the universe, that that thing comes inevitably along that way. But the trial is not eternal, it does not overwhelm you. Oftentimes the sorrow of to-day is so heavy it blinds the eyes to the sunshine, it shuts out the blooming flower, it makes the whole earth seem dark, but in six months or less you wonder how you ever thought it was so dark. All this change has come because you are once more adjusted to your surroundings. It is true, of course, the first great sorrow must come to every human being. The dumb beast partaking of life of its kind, or of its master, has no great recuperative sources from within its soul, has not that part of life that knows of something beyond physical life, is not filled with the hope that takes possession of you when you stand beside the grave of your dearly loved one, that consciousness, that which, without one's being aware of it sustains and strengthens you in the most wonderful ways; that vast other realm, to which you are not consciously adjusted, but which impinges upon human life and takes possession of it, is what sustains every human being when that which is called death comes to the household; whatever be the faith or form of religion, or the lack of it; Ingersoll by the side of the grave of his beloved one; the Spiritualist by the side of the grave of his or her loved ones; the church member by the side of the grave of his or her loved ones, they each draw from that vast other realm the only comfort that there is. And it is similar in each case though it comes to them under different names: Faith in Christ, faith in the universe or faith in the immortality of the soul. It does not matter what the name is, the great universe of the soul adjusts you to it after a while.

Adjusting Ourselves to the Universe.

Bye and bye you cease to try to adjust the universe to yourself and begin to adjust yourself to the universe. Then the storm of the sea does not appall; you do not run against the rocks; the thistles and thorns do not pierce you so fiercely. Let this extend through the moral and spiritual universe and you solve the problem of life. It is not everything to my standard, but my standard to everything. It is like solving the question of political economy; not everything for the crown, not everything for the kingdom, not everything for one, but everything for all.

When we begin to adjust ourselves to the universe we begin to adjust ourselves to people. We find that the people are not purposely running against us on the street, they do not intend to hurt us. Except they run against our favorite corn, our sore arm then we think they are doing it just to hurt us. It is this or that or the other place just where we are so sensitive, it is in that direction that things hurt us. But the truth is, people are just going forward and these things will occur. We cannot think the whole human family is just trying to hurt us. When we cease to think that then we also begin to see that especial ones are not trying to hurt us. For the most part they are trying to help us. They are no worse than we are, they are trying to help themselves, just as we think we are. When this thought takes possession of the human race every human being will see for him or herself that he or she is a world to be conquered by him or herself. But there is a universe to be adjusted too; i. e., to all the other lives that are in the universe. It is this recognition, this consciousness of being adapted to others.

Now it is no lack of principle for you to adapt yourself to your surroundings. It would not become martyrs to beat their bodies against prison walls or barriers. Pascal writing immortal poems survived longer than if he had knocked his brains out trying to shake his prison walls. The conquest comes in other ways. When physical things cannot be moved spiritual things are the most triumphant. When the slave could not leave his master because of the bloodhounds and gyves, his spirit was free in the prayer-meeting to know and prophesy of the day of freedom.

The Greater Readjustment.

To-day whatever be the environment, whatever be the difficulties it is not worth while to dash your head against a stone wall. You cannot tear down the Trusts, you cannot do anything with the power of Mammon that way. Do not knock your brains out in any futile attempts. The greater readjustment is the recognition of the fraternity of human lives. When the church-member recognizes that fraternity the walls crumble. There is no possible crystallization of mammon. Do you not change with this readjustment, this change in your nature; the larger method is the only true method? Curing Satan with Satanic methods is obsolete; it is a thing of the past. "Overcome evil with good" is in the great readjustment of the future. Get into line with the larger method, into co-operation with the greater and more potent forces. Let the Czar and Emperor, the king and royalty make treaties if they will. Let Satan chain Satan if he can. But the angels can break the fetters for such as know them. Peter walked forth from prison, and the Disciples conquered under the dominion of the larger power; your own lives become unfettered because of this great loyalty to one another.

When one is adjusted to the larger humanity, and the larger universe, to the spiritual forces, loyalty to this king, or that emperor, or this government means nothing. You cannot be disloyal if you are loyal to humanity. When William H. Seward announced the "higher law" in connection with slavery, those who were apologists for slavery called it "treason," and said he was disloyal to the government, and the Constitution, and the laws. But, being loyal to freedom, to humanity and to the law that included the slave and the slave-holder made him loyal unto the nation and unto God. Of course the flowering out of the past kind of loyalty was war. The flowering out of the highest loyalty then was the Emancipation Proclamation. But, friends, if it is a life of martyrdom, or the cost of a physical life, it is not so bad for freedom as it is for serfdom and bondage, and military rule. Who deplores the millions of lives lost to advance a Crown, or to advance a Government in a wrongful possession? Here are martyrs going straight to the gallows, or to the prison, or to social crucifixion, and people think they do not want to die.

The coward is said to hesitate before he takes up arms for his country. The brave man and woman will not array themselves against the universe, will not array themselves against the great immutable principles. Those men who are ready in retort have said in parliament or congress or at other places, "we would rather be right than to be king or president," they may or may not know the value of what they said. But knowing the right, no human being can afford to be on any other side. Knowing the correct principles, no human being can afford not to speak and not to act. As that means that you place yourself in accord with the universe, even if martyrdom is there. But the marytr does not feel as you do about it. He who sacrifices what is called his life for truth gains his life. He does not feel that it is a sacrifice. If you are cringing and cowardly in the tribute you give to truth; if you say, "Oh, yes, I am a Spiritualist, but it has cost me a good deal," "I am a reformer, but I have paid dearly for it," what do you mean by that? What do you mean, when the gateways of heaven have been opened and your loved ones are restored to you? when these forces have been given you wherewith to interpret the meaning of life and death? It is because you fear this or that man's opinion, it is the thought of Mrs. Grundy, or something or other that some one has said. What is that? You cannot afford to slam the doors of heaven shut when they have been opened to you, because your neighbors criticise. In our adjustment to the universe Mrs. Grundy is not to be considered. Because Mrs. Grundy believes in the "latest thing," she believes in the most fashionable fad, and her life is devoted to the calumny of that which is highest and best. Edison does not care a fig for Mrs. Grundy if he can understand the latest and highest electrical vibrations. Astronomers who cross continents and seas to find out what will be revealed during an eclipse of the sun do not care whether Mrs. Grundy thinks the money well spent or not.

The Universe Is Ours.

In the total eclipse of the skies, the total spiritual eclipse that seems to fall upon the world, he who sees the corona of the spiritual sun illuming and lighting the world in the midst of this eclipse, flashing its light athwart the tear-stained, dark valleys of sorrow, cannot afford to let the shadows of the valleys intervene.

Our great adjustment lies in knowing that the universe is ours; that it holds all that we want, all we need to appropriate, all that eternity will require; and that here, in this small, pent-up space of time and sense and earthliness, the things that come and go, that meet and pass, that are born and perish, that abide for a time and disappear are so many stepping stones, little obstacles that we must climb over in order to reach that upper kingdom, where the adjustment is larger; where there is greater perception, where the powers of the spirit unfold more and more; where, even there as here, we cannot be lost, because we are all in eternity, now and to-day, and the forces of the universe are ours.

REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342R, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS.

Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is: and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

ENCYCLOPEDIA ... OF ... BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM ... OR ... A CONCORDANCE

To the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism;

Together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible.

BY MOSES HULL.

Much that is in this book appeared in an abridged form in a series of nine full pages of THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER. These articles were prepared at the call of hundreds of Spiritualists who felt the need of some kind of document for ready reference. They only seemed to whet the appetite for more; hence the publication of this work.

The author, Moses Hull, has written many volumes on Spiritualististic and other themes and each one is full of careful study on the subject chosen. Mr. Hull, in his introduction of this work says:

"Hoping that this book will serve to lead the people out of the wilderness of doubt and despair; and that when Spiritualism shall have wrested the Bible from its 'sanctified' enemies, it will not 'spike' it, but will use it to batter down the walls of Christian superstition and ignorance. I send it out on its errand of enlightenment with the humble prayer that it will prove a divine benediction to every reader."

recommend that this convention extend to Treasurer Mayer some special recognition of his splendid example and generous offering.

Our Trustees.

Our trustees have worked together throughout the year in perfect harmony and each and every member of the board has faithfully endeavored to do his best for the N. S. A. The results of their stewardship are now before you as delegates, and I trust that the outcome of their labors is not one of disappointment to you. To every member of the board, I desire to return my heartfelt thanks for favors received.

Conclusion.

I have endeavored to present to you an honest outline of the work of the past year, and have made such recommendations as I felt to be for the best good of the N. S. A. and our cause as a whole for the year to come. The past year has been one of great activity along nearly all lines of effort, and many trying episodes have arisen, all of which have received the considerate attention of the officers of the N. S. A. I feel that good has resulted from the labors of the year and fully believe that, while some mistakes may have been made, the work, on the whole, is the best in the history of the N. S. A. The signs of the times are auspicious for a steady, healthful growth of our beloved cause during the year next ensuing. There is nothing pessimistic about Spiritualism, and the sunny skies of to-day are the reflex of its great optimistic spirit. Let us rejoice in the progress we have made in the past, and go bravely forward to meet the duties of the new year. The signs are all propitious, the outlook is splendid, and it is now for us, the followers of Spiritualism, to prove its worth to the children of men by our devotion to it, and by the use we make of the splendid truths it has given to us.

All of which is respectfully submitted. HARRISON D. BARRETT,
President N. S. A.

RED, WHITE AND BLUE.

She was a patriot-maid,
My girl so sweet and true,
The colors she displayed
Were the red, white and blue!
Her cheeks were red as roses,—
Her lips so good to kiss,
Her eyes were heaven's own blue,
This sweet-faced, gentle miss.

Her teeth were white as milk,
Her hair a wavy-brown,
Her skin as soft as silk,—
She captured all the town!
Her neck of swan-like grace,
Her ears pink-shells most fine;
When I her form would trace
She seemed to me divine!

Red cheeks and wooing, smiling lips,
Blue eyes of merry glance,
White feet that o'er the green grass trips
And won me in the dance.
I love this tender maid,
To me her heart is true,
In her I see displayed
The red and white and blue.

TO MICHIGAN SPIRITUALISTS.

Notice of Appointment of State Missionaries.

At the last annual meeting of the official board of the Michigan State Spiritual Association, held in Lansing, it was deemed advisable to put forth some special efforts to advance the interests not only of the association and its subordinate societies, but the cause generally throughout the state; and in view of the great good resulting from the labors of the N. S. A. missionaries, and as well of state missionaries in other states, and being convinced that much good might be accomplished by like methods in this state, and that the best interests of the state and all subordinate societies could be best subserved by this plan, it was decided to appoint official missionaries whose duty it should be to visit the various societies throughout the state whenever their services were needed; also to devote themselves to the labor of extending the organization into new fields.

The advantages of this plan are obvious. First, those societies that are not in a position to employ speakers and mediums regularly, may enjoy the privilege of the services of the missionaries for short periods of from one week to one month, at a very nominal cost.

Second. Societies desiring to make special efforts to extend themselves and increase their membership may have the assistance of these missionaries with no extra cost for the extra work.

Third. Disconnected Spiritualists in localities where there is no society, may have the privilege of calling into their midst official workers of their own state, who have no local prejudices, but who have at heart alike the interests of all societies, and all localities, fully empowered to organize new and to re-organize old and weak or defunct ones.

Fourth. Speakers and mediums seeking appointments in this state may be materially aided in securing same by communicating with the missionaries who will always be in intimate touch with every society in the state, and therefore able to give information of value concerning the conditions and general needs of each society and every locality, and thus help to bring about satisfactory arrangements between workers and societies.

It will be the aim of these missionaries to make their work harmonious with and in some degree subordinate to, the work of the N. S. A. missionaries. Complete reports of the work of the state missionaries will be made to the state board, and published in the Spiritual press from time to time.

The fullest co-operation from all societies, and Spiritualists generally throughout the state with the missionaries, is desired by the state officers, to the end that our united efforts may result in a renewed interest in our beloved cause and a broader dissemination of its grand truth throughout our fair state.

In view of the foregoing, the board has appointed and commissioned as official missionaries for the M. S. S. A., Mr. and Mrs. E. Worden White of Detroit. All correspondence should be addressed to

MR. AND MRS. E. WORDEN WHITE,
292 Harrison Ave., Detroit Mich.

BRIGHT POINTS OF LIGHT.

Reflections in Reference to Them, by Mrs. Petersilea.

To the Editor:—In a recent issue of The Progressive Thinker, T. F. Lee of Lakeport, Cal., speaks of little, bright points of light, which he thinks are little life entities. He says that a lady of his acquaintance can also see them. Now, Brother Francis, I can also see them, and have done so all my life. Twenty years ago, my dear husband and myself, after watching these darting points of light for a long time, asked his spirit father, Franz Petersilea, what they were. He told us, and also wrote it in "The Discovered Country," "Oceanides," and a number of other books, that this earth was surrounded by an ocean of spiritual germs; that these little, darting, points of light were the great sea of germs. Not only was it written in the books, and wholly explained, but it has been written through me times without number, and also published a number of times in your most excellent paper. In fact, I have been influenced to write it so much that at length I became weary of doing so, utterly discouraged, as no one paid the slightest attention to it, and at last, when it would appear in my writing from the spirits, I would strike it out when I copied them. I also gave explicit directions how to see them, for they are visible to everyone, if they will look right, and without prejudice. It does not require clairvoyant sight to see them. If you are sitting in a room, look toward the light of a window. Do not look at anything. Let the eyes rest upon the air a few yards in front of you. Look steadily for a short time and you will see innumerable points of light, transparent and translucent, darting hither and thither, and never at rest for a moment. After once seeing them one can see them at almost any time and anywhere. They are the spiritual life entities or germs of all things that exist upon the earth; and there can be no life without them.

MRS. CARLYLE PETERSILEA.

A FIGHT IN CHURCH.

In Which Blood Flowed Freely—The Blood of the Redeemer Will "Wipe Out" Their Sins.

St. Thomas.—County Magistrate Hunt at Port Burwell Thursday investigated the Otter Valley Baptist Church scandal, following a feud between the pastor, Rev. Wm. Walker, and his supporters, and an opposing faction headed by Deacon Thomas McCurdy.

The evidence showed that the fight had been rather furious in which blood flowed.

Magistrate Hunt expressed his regret at the disgraceful occurrence. "No one deplores it more than I do," said Mr. Walker.

Benjamin Grandsen, one of the principals in the church fight, was fined $30 and 16.50 costs; Deacon Thomas McCurdy was fined $20 and $16.30 costs; Deacon Thomas Harvey was fined $10 and $16.30 costs, and George Walker, the pastor's son, was fined $5 without costs, the magistrate taking his age into account.

The trial was marked, to use Magistrate Hunt's own words, by "some of the tallest swearing he ever heard," and he asserts that "the evidence in whisky cases was nothing compared to it."—Woodstock (Ontario) Sentinel.

ADJUSTING ONESELF TO THE UNIVERSE.

Discourse Through Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond, Chicago, October 1, 1905.

"Whither shall I go from thy spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?

"If I ascend up to heaven thou art there; if I make my bed in hell behold, thou art there.

"If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me."

Whether in hell or heaven, whether on earth or in any other planet, what does it matter, if one knows the Center, the Supreme Power?

Formerly, in the dark ages, astronomy failed because people made this little, small Earth the center of the solar system. They could not calculate the eclipses; they could not tell about the other planets; they were at a loss to understand. But just as soon as with the eye of mathematics—the only accurate material science—they discovered that the sun is the center, as soon as they discovered that all these stars revolved around the sun, instead of the sun, moon and stars revolving around the Earth, their calculations became more accurate, almost perfect; and when by the observation of that which is known as the precession of the equinoxes they found there was another, more distant center, they then became still more accurate because they could make mathematical allowances for the rotations of the solar system around that more distant center.

Difficulties in Adjustment.

So whenever one makes oneself the center of the universe there will be stone walls here and obstacles there, unexpected eclipses and storms that one does not know how to meet. Whenever you think the universe is doing something to you instead of for you, you will struggle and complain. It is this doing to you that constitutes the great difficulty of adjustment here. "Why did it storm to-day when I wanted to go to church?" "Why do people have to do this or that or the other thing just to interfere with me?" "Why is somebody born, or why does somebody die, just to punish me?" "Why was my child blind, or this one crippled, or that one something else, just to make me more trouble?" Of course this attitude not only sees everything that is shadowy, but invites the shadows; goes out to meet them, rushes hither and thither to find difficulties, that "other people" are always creating.

Just as soon as you begin to understand that you cannot get out of the universe if you try, you will make up your minds to be reconciled to your environment and make the best of it wherever you may be, and know, that when it is time you will take the next step.

Most people are like babies. Of course the baby starts to go to a place in opposite side of the room, and goes, according to nature, in a straight line, never noticing the stool or chair that is in the way. Of course the baby falls. If it is a grown-up baby, "somebody put them there for people to stumble over." Then the baby, like the grown-up baby, begins to reason, the baby must learn to climb next time. Then before the baby begins to build roadways—another state of physical expression—the baby just knows the next best thing is to climb over the barriers. The primal men are good climbers, they go over the hills instead of around them; they do not hesitate to use their feet. It is only after they begin to build roadways—another stage of complex growth—that they go around the obstacle, and do not climb. Undoubtedly when people return to the primal conditions of the soul they will find that the obstacles are there to surmount. It is a part of the development of the small babe to climb. If there is a flight of stairs anywhere the baby will find it. You have to put up a great many barriers to keep the baby from climbing; even if it has a tumble or two it does not make any difference, the baby will climb. The great secret of life is, that all people wish to climb; they all want to gain something that seems inaccessible, yet if this or that, or the other barrier intervenes they think somebody put it there purposely to hinder them. How do you know but what it is true, to make it necessary for them to climb?

Then people seem to think that somebody is always trying to do something against them. Sometimes people have natures that are suspicious, and they think this one or that one who has been a friend is always doing something against them. Now the chances are nine to one, or ninety-nine to one they are not thinking anything about the suspicious ones at all. Of course this is not very gratifying to their vanity or self-esteem. But people usually do not go out of their way to do harmful things to other people, except when they want to "hold them up" to get their money, or for some influence they want to compel them to bring for some purpose. It is only through revenge, which is very rare, or some selfish motive that people take the trouble to go out of their way to do anything to you.

For the most part the universe is not doing anything to you. The stars will go on, the earth will revolve, earthquakes in South America and in the Sandwich Islands, or in Italy or in Greece will shock the earth and swallow up cities; Mount Vesuvius will not be stilled for all that the Church of Rome, and all the other churches in the world can do. The universe is adjusted to the universal law and methods. All may be one with that law, all may be one with the things that are adjusted to that law. But you or we cannot fight the universe single-handed. We are a part of it, and that is the sublime beauty of the situation. We only have charge over our ego and thought, not fully over all the environment, still the possession of the entity is ours, but we cannot flounce out of the universe because we are offended; and we cannot flounce back again because we wish again to enter the universe. We are held by that which is like unto ourselves. The part that is like the dust is held by the laws that govern the dust; the part that is like the Intelligence of the universe is held by that Intelligence. We did not decide to go some other way when we found out that the world was moving on its axis. But while we can do that in our airships and by our motor powers, we do not decide that we shall have some other laws than those that govern the mechanism of the world.

We know there are other forces in the human intelligence that, not only can co-operate with nature, but, if we take that part of the universe rightly, we believe the soul can transcend physical nature. We can never exceed material law except by a knowledge of the power of the spirit; and that is governed in its own realm by forces that belong to the spirit. When we are one with God in the universe that belongs to God we shall be adjusted. Now, of course, all laws of chemistry, all discoveries of men like Edison, all explorations in the realm of material science are but adaptations to the laws that govern the material universe. If we go counter to the winds we go there by principles that can be mathematically calculated; if we row up stream we take into account the strength of the current, if the wind is against us too, we take that into account. We do not think that either the winds nor the currents of the stream are placed there just to baffle us. In this realm of the material universe the greater the mind the greater the control over the elements. This is because the mind is adjusted to know that one must act in conformity with the great purposes of nature. The aim of science is not to overcome those purposes, not to set them aside, but to work in harmony with them to the end that every tempest shall be our pinion, every storm our source of strength.

We pray for rain; yet when the deluge comes we are scarcely prepared for it. We pray for the purifying pinions of the winds; yet the tornado and the cyclone seem to baffle us. We pray that all the forces of nature may bring an abundant harvest to our doors and ships to our harbors with the freightage of the world—or a part of it—but we forget that the harvest of the fields and the freightage of all the world are not the sole objects of nature. This man's wheat or that man's vineyard are not the only propositions of the summer time. The reason people cannot better govern the elements to-day is that people look upon the universe from the narrow standpoint of personal selfishness. "Now I want rain," says one man. But he does not know about the man over there—he may not want it. One man says, "I want this or that or the other kind of weather," but he does not think of the other man over there who may not want the same kind of weather. Now one can have rain and another sunshine just as soon as people adapt themselves to the methods that the universe employs. When you know the methods that nature employs to get up a storm, you can have one. Most of you can have a domestic cyclone at any time. But the elements seem to baffle you.

The truth is, the collection of the necessary amount of vapor to produce rain is only a question of further knowledge of the methods of the universe; and all the study in a scientific direction along such lines will bring its fruitful results as soon as people are ready. But the people are not ready. The great intellect of man requires years to arrive at the knowledge of the spirit. This spirituality has been forgotten; it has been either cloistered in the theology of the churches of the world and never used, or it has fallen upon the quicksands and rocks of materialism. The spirit of man must be more and more unfolded to meet the demands of the human being in adapting himself or herself to the universe.

How often people feel like aliens, how often they feel like orphans, how often they feel as though they had wandered far from the Father's house, and from their kindred, and do not know how to retrace their steps. Fortunately you do not have to retrace your steps from the road however winding, or however deep and dark the valley, it leads to God and to the soul. You cannot be lost in the jungle, you cannot be lost on ships at sea, you cannot be lost anywhere. Therefore wherever you are you can adapt yourself to the universe of things and to the Infinite. Because it is but a step from things to the greater realities.

Alexander Selkirk (or Robinson Crusoe), the tale of your boyhood and your grandfather's boyhood, was an illustration of man's adaptation to nature, of making the best of things. If he had had little larger gleams into the spirit, if the great universe of intelligence had been open to him, that particular human life would not have been of so much consequence. And the knowledge comes when still supposing all these things fail; supposing your work fails; supposing your life fails; supposing the strain of material life is broken, you are not out of the universe, you are not out of your soul, you are not away from God. The universe holds all the propositions that you need; holds everything you want to know or want to understand. It is only a question of your arrival, of being ready.

Now as the baby, the little girl and boy, can ask a great many questions that cannot be answered until they are grown up; and then they ask a great many questions that seem to be unanswered, but the answer is there. The trouble with people is, they want the answer before they are ready. They do not know what they want. A great many people say when they have an opportunity to ask questions, the most difficult thing is to know what to ask and how to formulate the question. To a person who can intelligently ask a question and understand it, the answer is not far away.

The Purpose of the Universe.

Then people say: "Oh, if I have done my best I do not see why this or that or the other calamity should befall me." Thousands, and thousands and thousands of people do their best and still things do seem to befall them. The meaning of this is, not that they are singled out as exceptions for that thing to happen to, but that it is a part of the plan and purpose of the universe, that that thing comes inevitably along that way. But the trial is not eternal, it does not overwhelm you. Oftentimes the sorrow of to-day is so heavy it blinds the eyes to the sunshine, it shuts out the blooming flower, it makes the whole earth seem dark, but in six months or less you wonder how you ever thought it was so dark. All this change has come because you are once more adjusted to your surroundings. It is true, of course, the first great sorrow must come to every human being. The dumb beast partaking of life of its kind, or of its master, has no great recuperative sources from within its soul, has not that part of life that knows of something beyond physical life, is not filled with the hope that takes possession of you when you stand beside the grave of your dearly loved one, that consciousness, that which, without one's being aware of it sustains and strengthens you in the most wonderful ways; that vast other realm, to which you are not consciously adjusted, but which impinges upon human life and takes possession of it, is what sustains every human being when that which is called death comes to the household; whatever be the faith or form of religion, or the lack of it; Ingersoll by the side of the grave of his beloved one; the Spiritualist by the side of the grave of his or her loved ones; the church member by the side of the grave of his or her loved ones, they each draw from that vast other realm the only comfort that there is. And it is similar in each case though it comes to them under different names: Faith in Christ, faith in the universe or faith in the immortality of the soul. It does not matter what the name is, the great universe of the soul adjusts you to it after a while.

Adjusting Ourselves to the Universe.

Bye and bye you cease to try to adjust the universe to yourself and begin to adjust yourself to the universe. Then the storm of the sea does not appall; you do not run against the rocks; the thistles and thorns do not pierce you so fiercely. Let this extend through the moral and spiritual universe and you solve the problem of life. It is not everything to my standard, but my standard to everything. It is like solving the question of political economy; not everything for the crown, not everything for the kingdom, not everything for one, but everything for all.

When we begin to adjust ourselves to the universe we begin to adjust ourselves to people. We find that the people are not purposely running against us on the street, they do not intend to hurt us. Except they run against our favorite corn, our sore arm then we think they are doing it just to hurt us. It is this or that or the other place just where we are so sensitive, it is in that direction that things hurt us. But the truth is, people are just going forward and these things will occur. We cannot think the whole human family is just trying to hurt us. When we cease to think that then we also begin to see that especial ones are not trying to hurt us. For the most part they are trying to help us. They are no worse than we are, they are trying to help themselves, just as we think we are. When this thought takes possession of the human race every human being will see for him or herself that he or she is a world to be conquered by him or herself. But there is a universe to be adjusted too, i. e., to all the other lives that are in the universe. It is this recognition, this consciousness of being adapted to others.

Now it is no lack of principle for you to adapt yourself to your surroundings. It would not become martyrs to beat their bodies against prison walls or barriers. Pascal writing immortal poems survived longer than if he had knocked his brains out trying to shake his prison walls. The conquest comes in other ways. When physical things cannot be moved spiritual things are the most triumphant. When the slave could not leave his master because of the bloodhounds and gyves, his spirit was free in the prayer-meeting to know and prophesy of the day of freedom.

The Greater Readjustment.

To-day whatever be the environment, whatever be the difficulties it is not worth while to dash your head against a stone wall. You cannot tear down the Trusts, you cannot do anything with the power of Mammon that way. Do not knock your brains out in any futile attempts. The greater readjustment is the recognition of the fraternity of human lives. When the church-member recognizes that fraternity the walls crumble. There is no possible crystallization of mammon. Do you not change with this readjustment, this change in your nature; the larger method is the only true method? Curing Satan with Satanic methods is obsolete; it is a thing of the past. "Overcome evil with good" is in the great readjustment of the future. Get into line with the larger method, into co-operation with the greater and more potent forces. Let the Czar and Emperor, the king and royalty make treaties if they will. Let Satan chain Satan if he can. But the angels can break the fetters for such as know them. Peter walked forth from prison, and the Disciples conquered under the dominion of the larger power; your own lives become unfettered because of this great loyalty to one another.

When one is adjusted to the larger humanity, and the larger universe, to the spiritual forces, loyalty to this king, or that emperor, or this government means nothing. You cannot be disloyal if you are loyal to humanity. When William H. Seward announced the "higher law" in connection with slavery, those who were apologists for slavery called it "treason," and said he was disloyal to the government, and the Constitution, and the laws. But, being loyal to freedom, to humanity and to the law that included the slave and the slave-holder made him loyal unto the nation and unto God. Of course the flowering out of the past kind of loyalty was war. The flowering out of the highest loyalty then was the Emancipation Proclamation. But, friends, if it is a life of martyrdom, or the cost of a physical life, it is not so bad for freedom as it is for serfdom and bondage, and military rule. Who deplores the millions of lives lost to advance a Crown, or to advance a Government in a wrongful possession? Here are martyrs going straight to the gallows, or to the prison, or to social crucifixion, and people think they do not want to die.

The coward is said to hesitate before he takes up arms for his country. The brave man and woman will not array themselves against the universe, will not array themselves against the great immutable principles. Those men who are ready in retort have said in parliament or congress or at other places, "we would rather be right than to be king or president," they may or may not know the value of what they said. But knowing the right, no human being can afford to be on any other side. Knowing the correct principles, no human being can afford not to speak and not to act. As that means that you place yourself in accord with the universe, even if martyrdom is there. But the marytr does not feel as you do about it. He who sacrifices what is called his life for truth gains his life. He does not feel that it is a sacrifice. If you are cringing and cowardly in the tribute you give to truth; if you say, "Oh, yes, I am a Spiritualist, but it has cost me a good deal," "I am a reformer, but I have paid dearly for it," what do you mean by that? What do you mean, when the gateways of heaven have been opened and your loved ones are restored to you? when these forces have been given you wherewith to interpret the meaning of life and death? It is because you fear this or that man's opinion, it is the thought of Mrs. Grundy, or something or other that some one has said. What is that? You cannot afford to slam the doors of heaven shut when they have been opened to you, because your neighbors criticise. In our adjustment to the universe Mrs. Grundy is not to be considered. Because Mrs. Grundy believes in the "latest thing," she believes in the most fashionable fad, and her life is devoted to the calumny of that which is highest and best. Edison does not care a fig for Mrs. Grundy if he can understand the latest and highest electrical vibrations. Astronomers who cross continents and seas to find out what will be revealed during an eclipse of the sun do not care whether Mrs. Grundy thinks the money well spent or not.

The Universe Is Ours.

In the total eclipse of the skies, the total spiritual eclipse that seems to fall upon the world, he who sees the corona of the spiritual sun illuming and lighting the world in the midst of this eclipse, flashing its light athwart the tear-stained, dark valleys of sorrow, cannot afford to let the shadows of the valleys intervene.

Our great adjustment lies in knowing that the universe is ours; that it holds all that we want, all we need to appropriate, all that eternity will require; and that here, in this small, pent-up space of time and sense and earthliness, the things that come and go, that meet and pass, that are born and perish, that abide for a time and disappear are so many stepping stones, little obstacles that we must climb over in order to reach that upper kingdom, where the adjustment is larger; where there is greater perception, where the powers of the spirit unfold more and more; where, even there as here, we cannot be lost, because we are all in eternity, now and to-day, and the forces of the universe are ours.

Conclusion.

I have endeavored to present to you an honest outline of the work of the past year, and have made such recommendations as I felt to be for the best good of the N. S. There is nothing pessimistic about Spiritualism, and the sunny skies of to-day are the reflex of its great optimistic spirit. Let us rejoice in the progress we have made in the past, and go bravely forward to meet the duties of the new year. The signs are all propitious, the outlook is splendid, and it is now for us, the followers of Spiritualism, to prove its worth to the children of men by our devotion to it, and by the use we make of the splendid truths it has given to us.

TO MICHIGAN SPIRITUALISTS.

Notice of Appointment of State Missionaries.

At the last annual meeting of the official board of the Michigan State Spiritual Association, held in Lansing, it was deemed advisable to put forth some special efforts to advance the interests not only of the association and its subordinate societies, but the cause generally throughout the state; and in view of the great good resulting from the labors of the N. S. A. missionaries, and as well of state missionaries in other states, and being convinced that much good might be accomplished by like methods in this state, and that the best interests of the state and all subordinate societies could be best subserved by this plan, it was decided to appoint official missionaries whose duty it should be to visit the various societies throughout the state whenever their services were needed; also to devote themselves to the labor of extending the organization into new fields.

The advantages of this plan are obvious. First, those societies that are not in a position to employ speakers and mediums regularly, may enjoy the privilege of the services of the missionaries for short periods of from one week to one month, at a very nominal cost.

Second. Societies desiring to make special efforts to extend themselves and increase their membership may have the assistance of these missionaries with no extra cost for the extra work.

Third. Disconnected Spiritualists in localities where there is no society, may have the privilege of calling into their midst official workers of their own state, who have no local prejudices, but who have at heart alike the interests of all societies, and all localities, fully empowered to organize new and to re-organize old and weak or defunct ones.

Fourth. Speakers and mediums seeking appointments in this state may be materially aided in securing same by communicating with the missionaries who will always be in intimate touch with every society in the state, and therefore able to give information of value concerning the conditions and general needs of each society and every locality, and thus help to bring about satisfactory arrangements between workers and societies.

It will be the aim of these missionaries to make their work harmonious with and in some degree subordinate to, the work of the N. S. A. missionaries. Complete reports of the work of the state missionaries will be made to the state board, and published in the Spiritual press from time to time.

The fullest co-operation from all societies, and Spiritualists generally throughout the state with the missionaries, is desired by the state officers, to the end that our united efforts may result in a renewed interest in our beloved cause and a broader dissemination of its grand truth throughout our fair state.

In view of the foregoing, the board has appointed and commissioned as official missionaries for the M. S. S. A., Mr. and Mrs. E. Worden White of Detroit. All correspondence should be addressed to

BRIGHT POINTS OF LIGHT.

Reflections in Reference to Them, by Mrs. Petersilea.

To the Editor:—In a recent issue of The Progressive Thinker, T. F. Lee of Lakeport, Cal., speaks of little, bright points of light, which he thinks are little life entities. He says that a lady of his acquaintance can also see them. Now, Brother Francis, I can also see them, and have done so all my life. Twenty years ago, my dear husband and myself, after watching these darting points of light for a long time, asked his spirit father, Franz Petersilea, what they were. He told us, and also wrote it in "The Discovered Country," "Oceanides," and a number of other books, that this earth was surrounded by an ocean of spiritual germs; that these little, darting, points of light were the great sea of germs. Not only was it written in the books, and wholly explained, but it has been written through me times without number, and also published a number of times in your most excellent paper. In fact, I have been influenced to write it so much that at length I became weary of doing so, utterly discouraged, as no one paid the slightest attention to it, and at last, when it would appear in my writing from the spirits, I would strike it out when I copied them. I also gave explicit directions how to see them, for they are visible to everyone, if they will look right, and without prejudice. It does not require clairvoyant sight to see them. If you are sitting in a room, look toward the light of a window. Do not look at anything. Let the eyes rest upon the air a few yards in front of you. Look steadily for a short time, and you will see innumerable points of light, transparent and translucent, darting hither and thither, and never at rest for a moment. After once seeing them one can see them at almost any time and anywhere. They are the spiritual life entities or germs of all things that exist upon the earth; and there can be no life without them.

A FIGHT IN CHURCH.

In Which Blood Flowed Freely—The Blood of the Redeemer Will "Wipe Out" Their Sins.

St. Thomas.—County Magistrate Hunt at Port Burwell Thursday investigated the Otter Valley Baptist Church scandal, following a feud between the pastor, Rev. Wm. Walker, and his supporters, and an opposing faction headed by Deacon Thomas McCurdy.

The evidence showed that the fight had been rather furious in which blood flowed.

Magistrate Hunt expressed his regret at the disgraceful occurrence. "No one deplores it more than I do," said Mr. Walker.

Benjamin Grandsen, one of the principals in the church fight, was fined $30 and 16.50 costs; Deacon Thomas McCurdy was fined $20 and $16.30 costs; Deacon Thomas Harvey was fined $10 and $16.30 costs, and George Walker, the pastor's son, was fined $5 without costs, the magistrate taking his age into account.

The trial was marked, to use Magistrate Hunt's own words, by "some of the tallest swearing he ever heard," and he asserts that "the evidence in whisky cases was nothing compared to it."—Woodstock (Ontario) Sentinel.

REMARKABLE INVENTION

AN INSTRUMENT THAT RESTORES EYESIGHT.

Spectacles Can Be Abandoned.

This instrument is in the form of a pocket battery, which the inventors have patented and which they call "Actina," a word which is their trade mark and owned by them.

In the treatment of eye diseases the inventors of "Actina" claim there is no need for cutting or drugging the eye for any form of disease, cataracts, pterygiums and other abnormal growths can be removed and weakened vision restored by the new and more humane method. If this is a fact, there will be no need to go blind or to wear spectacles. "Actina" has been tested in hundreds of cases and has effected marvelous cures. So confident are the inventors that this device is an article of great merit that they give an absolutely free trial. They want every one interested to make a thorough investigation and a personal test of the "Actina." As it is sent on trial postpaid, any person can give it this test.

They issue a book of 100 pages—a complete dictionary of diseases—which tells all about "Actina," the diseases it will cure, what others think of it, what marvelous cures it has effected, and all about the responsibility of its owners, and it is sent absolutely free upon request. This book should be in the library of every family. Address New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 342R, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

A. SCHOPENHAUER ESSAYS.

Translated by T. B. Saunders. Cloth, 75 cents. "Schopenhauer is one of the few philosophers who can be generally understood without a commentary. All his theories claim to be drawn direct from facts, to be suggested by observation, and to interpret the world as it is: and whatever view he takes, he is constant in his appeal to the experience of common life. This characteristic endows his style with a freshness and vigor which would be difficult to match in the philosophic writing of any country, and impossible in that of Germany."—Translator.

ENCYCLOPEDIA ... OF ... BIBLICAL SPIRITUALISM ... OR ... A CONCORDANCE

To the principal passages of the Old and New Testament Scriptures which prove or imply Spiritualism;

Together with a brief history of the origin of many of the important books of the Bible.

BY MOSES HULL.

Much that is in this book appeared in an abridged form in a series of nine full pages of The Progressive Thinker. These articles were prepared at the call of hundreds of Spiritualists who felt the need of some kind of document for ready reference. They only seemed to whet the appetite for more; hence the publication of this work.

The author, Moses Hull, has written many volumes on Spiritualististic and other themes and each one is full of careful study on the subject chosen. Mr. Hull, in his introduction of this work says:

"Hoping that this book will serve to lead the people out of the wilderness of doubt and despair; and that when Spiritualism shall have wrested the Bible from its 'sanctified' enemies, it will not 'spike' it, but will use it to batter down the walls of Christian superstition and ignorance, I send it out on its errand of enlightenment with the humble prayer that it will prove a divine benediction to every reader."

General Survey.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work, and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "W. J. Colville lectured before the Secular League in Pythian Temple, Oct. 14. The Auxiliary of the First Association gave one of its social teas at Mr. Woods', the president. The Temple League will hold meetings in the Pythian Temple for the month of October. Mrs. A. M. Zoller is the test medium for the month. Mr. Emil Nobbes' meetings are well attended at the Spanish Veterans' Hall, Sunday evenings."

Dr. Juliet H. Severance will be back from a two months' visit East about November 1. Address her at her home, 578 E. 60th street, Chicago.

Harry J. Moore and Mrs. Eva McCoy will continue to serve the Montana State Spiritualists Association. They served that Association during May and June, September and October. Address either of them at Billings, Mont., until further notice.

R. F. Ring of Galveston, Tex., writes: "It is strange that people will stand in their own light, call themselves Spiritualists, and not take a Spiritualist paper of any kind. They seem to think they have got the 'brimstone hell' put out, and there is nothing to fear. They do not consider the Spiritualists have a worse hell, and there is no getting around it by forgiveness or long prayers, but each one has got to be his or her own savior."

G. W. Thompson writes: "I have been reading The Progressive Thinker now or three or four months, and feel as though I would not want to be without it. I am not a Spiritualist in the sense of being a member of any society, but I thoroughly believe in the truths of genuine Spiritualism. I have been much interested in a number of articles touching upon the very important matter of true spirit phenomena. In seance work I have never been fortunate enough to see anything that was satisfactory. I was invited a short time ago to attend what I was informed would be a genuine materialization seance, but the finale was, to my mind, a general hold-up. It seems to me there is a way to put these frauds and toggered-up-mediums out of business."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society was entertained last Sunday evening by two friends in platform work. Prof. McCard gave some very satisfactory palm-readings, showing him to be quite an adept in that line. Our surprise was the greatest when Mrs. O. B. Wilson let her control take her and gave many very satisfactory messages. This was her first experience in a hall, and she did fine and now we know what to do when we are short on mediums. On November 1 we expect to give another social dance. Prof. M. Moran will furnish the music. Admission 25 cents, including refreshments and cloakroom."

Mrs. C. Kirchner writes: "An exceedingly large audience greeted Mr. John W. Ring of Texas, Sunday afternoon, Oct. 15, at the Rising Sun Mission. He delivered his last lecture ere going to his home in Galveston to take up the work of the National Lyceum. In his remarks he dwelt entirely upon our beautiful philosophy. Words fail to express the grand inspiring thoughts he left with us, and at the conclusion of his lecture he was roundly applauded. Brother Marshall, president of the Psychical Research Society of Denver, occupied the platform with our speaker and the president. In the evening, Bro. Chas. Tisdale of California, delivered a telling discourse through his ancient Greek guide. His subject was Ancient and Modern Spiritualism, and by following him through the lecture, we gleaned lots of knowledge as to how the ancient people spread the gospel of Spiritualism in their time, and how they are working, in spirit now to uplift humanity. The selections of our choir were of the usual high order. Brother Thompson and Sister Thompson gave messages which were well received. We cordially invite all to attend our services every Sunday afternoon at 3, evening at 8, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western avenue. Our speaker for Sunday, Oct. 29, will be Dr. L. Rowell, a former Methodist minister. Our next social will be held on All Hallowe'en night, Oct. 31, at Sister Foote's, 1006 Washington Boulevard. All welcome."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Dr. Peebles is coming to Chicago to speak for the League, Saturday evening, Nov. 4, and he will speak for the Rising Sun Mission, Sunday afternoon, Nov. 5, and in the evening for the Aitken Society, 4308 Cottage Grove avenue.

The First Spiritualists Association, which meets in I. O. O. F. hall every Sunday evening, will organize a lyceum to be held each Sunday afternoon, corresponding with the orthodox Sabbath school. On Sunday, October 15, the Rev. Baade, of Detroit, Mich., who is now in charge of the pastoral work, gave a lecture to a 'large audience. Mrs. Baade is an old and tried worker in Spiritualism, having served the cause in every section of the United States, and the association here feels itself fortunate in again securing her for a few months. She was here a few years since and it was with much difficulty and hard work on the part of the board of trustees that she was again secured, as her services are so much in demand that her engagements sometimes run months ahead. She is strictly a Bible Spiritualist and her lectures are both eloquent and lucid pictures of the different phenomena recorded in that book, together with an explanation and defense of the philosophy of Spiritualism.—Wheeling Register.

Irene Gay writes from Willoughby, O.: "I would feel as though I had lost a dear friend should The Progressive Thinker fail to put in a weekly appearance. Willoughby had an intellectual feast Oct. 11, when one of the best inspirational lectures ever given here was delivered by Dell Herrick, in College Hall."

J. H. Collins writes of his various experiences in connection with Spiritualism. He has heard the various prominent lecturers, and read various books, and profited thereby. In conclusion he says: "I have recently returned from a western trip. While there I visited the home of Hon. Geo. Walser. In his pleasant home I witnessed some sights and heard things that will be held in sweet memory through the eternal ages."

Dr. A. S. Hudson, a venerable Spiritualist, lately passed to spirit life at Mount Vernon, Ohio, wrote the following to us on Sept. 29. He was 86 years of age, and a most excellent man: "Dear Mr. Francis, I am in a quandary. I am puzzled between two objections as deep as an oil well. The grand Progressive Thinker comes to hand every Tuesday. I look for it with lively expectation. The two articles referring to 'Aladdin's Lamp,' I cut out for my scrap book. The last item related to a request made by a member of the circle that a fish from the sea be brought before them. In a few minutes a shovel-nosed shark a foot and a half long, lay on the table before them. The paper having this item I have mislaid. Sorry I can't find it. If you have an extra copy please send me one."

J. L. Foster writes from Elwood, Ind.: "If my word is good for anything I wish to be permitted to say a few words in favor of our worthy sister, Mrs. F. V. Jackson, who has been attending the Progressive Spiritual Society of Elwood since the Chesterfield camp, about six or eight weeks. In all the time she was our worthy guest. Sister Jackson has sowed good seed here, and we expect a bountiful crop. Yet many of the seed fell by the wayside and upon ground that was not prepared to receive it. The world, the churches, and all the unregenerated can not receive the beautiful truths of the new dispensation, and those who advocate the true doctrine of Spiritualism will not be met with favor from such a class; but those who have been made acquainted with this sublime doctrine, by an experimental knowledge of the philosophy and phenomena will hail all such pure-minded workers with joy. We have no objection to either her doctrine, or spirit messages, but can heartily endorse them all, and sincerely recommend her to all lovers of truth. All mail sent to her present address will be duly forwarded."

Omega writes from Wichita Kansas: "Mrs. Jaquet and her very worthy guides gave their farewell lecture to the Independent Free Thinkers and Spiritualists last evening. After the lecture which was one of the finest ever given in this city, and which was upon marriage and the products of such unions, the dear little Indian girl took possession of Mrs. Jaquet's organism, and gave a nice little talk, and then gave fine messages, such as only Sunbeam can give, all being recognized. We as a body of Spiritualists regret her going away from our city, and she leaves us with the best wishes for her success wherever she goes, and any society employing her will find in her all she represents herself to be."

B. W. Gidney writes from Lynn, Mass.: "I have been a reader of your grand paper for many years, and glad to add a word of praise to the resolutions adopted by the Washington State Spiritualist Association. I would like to see those resolutions adopted by every state organization of Spiritualists in these United States. I want to quote Article 3 of the resolutions: 'The universal brotherhood implies the necessary active steps in the transformation of existing political, social and industrial conditions into such a system that will recognize and guarantee to each individual a full measure of justice in equal rights and opportunities.' I endorse that resolution. Let one take note, as I have, of the many Spiritualist circles I have attended. Eighty per cent of all questions asked and tests wanted are on business matters. The higher life, the grand truth of spirit return, is a secondary matter. Spiritualists should stand forth as workers for the new and better conditions for all humankind."

The Progressive Thinker is indebted to Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, of Philadelphia, for the active part she took in securing items and reports of officials for The Progressive Thinker, at the convention in Minneapolis.

MRS. CARRIE M. HINSDALE, OF FORT WORTH, TEXAS, HAS LATELY BEEN ELECTED PRESIDENT OF THE STATE ASSOCIATION. SHE WRITES: "I AM GLAD TO SAY MY HEALTH IS NOW ENTIRELY RESTORED AND I HOPE TO DO SOME WORK FOR SPIRITUALISM. LET ME ADD MY THANKS TO THE MANY YOU RECEIVE FOR THE NOBLE WORK YOU ARE DOING IN GIVING TO ALL SPIRITUALISTS SUCH A PAPER, AND PRESENTING EACH SUBSCRIBER WITH THE GRAND BOOKS YOU ISSUE. THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER IS, WITHOUT DOUBT THE MOST POPULAR, MOST WIDELY READ OF ALL THE SPIRITUALIST PAPERS, AND I SHALL TAKE GREAT PLEASURE IN COMMENDING IT, AND IN TRYING TO GET SUBSCRIBERS WHILE ON MY TRIPS THROUGH THIS STATE. MY BEST WISH FOR YOU IS RIP VAN WINKLE'S TOAST: 'MAY YOU LIVE LONG AND PROSPER,' AND MAY THE PROGRESSIVE THINKER SCATTER ITS SEEDS OF KNOWLEDGE, HELP AND COMFORT FAR AND WIDE."

The veteran lecturer, N. F. Ravlin, writes from Portland, Oregon, where he is lecturing: "Enclosed please find money order for $1 for which send The Progressive Thinker to Mrs. A. K. Graves. Mrs. Graves is 90 years of age, hale and hearty. She earns her living by making the most expensive point lace, and by teaching the art to others. She walks over a mile to the meetings, reads the finest print without glasses, is lively as a young woman of thirty, and in every way is a remarkable woman. I am having good success with the First Spiritual Society. Artisan's Hall, with a seating capacity of three or four hundred is crowded every Sunday night. No test mediums follow my lectures. I am getting hold of a large number of young people and many prominent citizens are coming in. Altogether the outlook is encouraging."

Henrietta L. Lichtig is now permanently located in her new home, 4709 Indiana avenue, where she will be pleased to meet her friends. Readings daily from 10 to 4.

Mrs. A. Sexsmith writes: "At the meeting of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society, Sunday, October 15, both afternoon and evening, was very enjoyable. We were favored in the afternoon by short talks by Sister Hill and Brother French, and messages by the same. In the evening, Mrs. Eva Fravel of Austin, lectured. She held the closest attention of all. Messages were given by Sister Hill and Alice Sexsmith, which were recognized. Strangers are requested to attend our meetings as there is always proof given of spirit return. The social given at the home of Mrs. Nora Hill, 705 Madison street, Thursday evening, Oct. 12, was indeed an enjoyable affair, and long to be remembered. The evening consisted of singing and short talks by Sister Hill and Brother John W. Ring, each giving some grand thoughts. Brother French and Sister McIntyre gave messages; a solo by Alice Sexsmith. Lunch being served, then came the fun of the evening in the way of raffling off a cake made by Mrs. Hill. Mr. Sexsmith being the winner, gave it back and it was sold to the highest bidder; Mr. Sexsmith bidding the highest, he presented it then to Miss Jennie Francis and Mr. Ring. This wound up the evening with a good, hearty laugh, and well wishes to all. Our dance on Saturday evening, Oct. 14, was not so largely attended as we expected, but all had a jolly time. Our next dance will be Saturday evening, Oct. 28. Don't forget our meetings every Sunday at 3 and 8 p. m., at O'Donnell's College Building, Paulina street, between Washington Blvd and Park Ave. All welcome. Open door."

Mrs. Augusta Grant writes from Elkhart, Ind.: "The Elkhart Spiritual Society has been enjoying a successful series of lectures given by Oscar A. Edgerly. His inspirations are of a high standard of thought, and intensely interesting, and brought forth much applause. We regret his time with us was so limited, but hope to hear more of him in the future."

Mrs. P. E. McArthur writes that she has witnessed the same phenomenon as described by T. F. Lee. She has seen these activities ever since a child.

Mrs. S. E. Carey writes: "The ladies of the Kenwood Spiritual Society will give another enjoyable social and dance on Manday evening, Oct. 30, at Kenwood Hall, 4308-10 Cottage Grove avenue; refreshments served; wardrobe free. The ladies intend to give one social each month to increase friendship, good fellowship and sociability of our co-workers and investigators, the proceeds to be used to help the society. We cordially invite all who wish a good time to come and join us in the merry-making. We will insure you a good time. Come and bring your friends."

Mrs. A. Turbett writes: "The Band of Harmony expects to have a grand bazaar, December 7, 1905. All friends of the cause come and help us make this the greatest success of all. We had a delightful time at the card party given Thursday, Oct. 19. Four beautiful sofa pillows were the prizes given to the winners."

Mrs. Maggie Henry, secretary, writes: "Interest in the meetings at (old 77) Spiritual Mission Chapel is increasing. We see new faces in the audience every Sunday. After the scripture lesson, our speaker, F. M. Stoller, took the subjects for his lecture from the audience; the discourse was very interesting, and highly appreciated. The lecture was followed by spirit messages by Madame Lucile DeLoux. Her messages were all recognized. Mr. Stoller, who is a fine psychic, followed with many psychometric readings. Strangers and skeptics are welcomed to our meetings."

Wm. Duerea writes: "The Fraternal Spiritualist Society of Greenup, Ill., was favored by a visit from Sister Schumacher, the pastor of the Spiritualistic Church Students of Nature, Chicago, who ordained our worthy brother, J. K. Dillon, as a minister and a teacher of Spiritualism. Quite a number of people was present to witness the impressive ceremony. Her lecture on ordination was from a Bible stand-point. Her words fell like the showers on the parched ground, and so soul-inspiring, no doubt they will be the means of leading some into the light. The following officers for the Fraternal Spiritualist Society were elected at our annual meeting: President, J. K. Dillon; vice-president, Lenora James; secretary, William Durea; treasurer, M. J. Starbuck; trustees, M. M. James and J. H. Ward. The circle meets Thursday and Sunday evenings."

TOP OF COL

Maurgerite Mac writes: "Thursday evening, Oct. 26, Mrs. Jeffrey Burland will hold a test social at her residence, 3019 Vernon avenue. Good psychics and palmists are always present to entertain with spirit messages and short readings pertaining to business and social affairs, and all have a pleasant social time. Refreshments served all for 25 cents.

H. F. Arnold writes: "The November meeting of the Chicago Spiritualists League will be held at Handel Hall 40 Randolph street, Saturday evening, November 4. Dr. J. M. Peebles, one of the most prominent speakers on the Spiritualistic platform will deliver the address. The Doctor never fails to please his audiences, and will certainly give investigators something to think about. Message-bearers are Mrs. Grace Aitken, Mrs. C. Schwahn and Mrs. Georgia G. Cooley. The musical program is excellent. Don't fail to be present."

N. S. A. CONVENTION.

tarian Association and are unwilling to include the Universalists and do ignore the Spiritualists; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the National Spiritualists Association do instruct its incomingming Secretary to open correspondence with the liberal churches and free thinkers of the United States and request those bodies to form a federation for the purpose of developing the cause of liberal religion and preventing dogmatic and intolerant religious domination.

TRIBUTE TO THE PRESS.

By a rising vote, in which every delegate voted in the affirmative, a vote of thanks was extended to the Minneapolis press for its fair and impartial reports of the Convention and for the liberal amount of space so donated. Thanks were also extended to the Minnesota state Association, J. S. Maxwell, in particular, for the services rendered in providing for the Convention.

MUCH UNFINISHED BUSINESS.

The closing business session of the Convention yesterday afternoon was crammed full of routine work and many matters had to be placed on the table to go over until the next Convention.

The report of the Children's Lyceum work was read by its Superintendent, John W. Ring. It received favorable consideration at the hands of the delegates and an appropriation for the carrying on of such work was made.

The finance Committee took subscriptions from the delegates present for the aid of the Association and something over $1,100 was raised in that manner.

The selection of the place of the next Annual Convention was one of the last official acts of the business session and resulted in the acceptance of an invitation from the Chicago Commercial Club to meet in that city. Other cities after the Convention were Milwaukee, Seattle, Los Angeles, Philadelphia and Washington.

OVATIONS FOR BARRETT.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in the Convention declaring itself to be unanimously in favor of the re-election of Harrison D. Barrett, of Canaan, Me., as President, to succeed himself. This makes his thirteenth year as president of the Association. The action of the delegates was the signal for an ovation for Mr. Barrett. He gracefully accepted the honor.

All the other officers were also re-elected as follows:

Vice-President—Dr. George B. Warne, Chicago.

Secretary—Mary T. Longley, Washington.

Treasurer—Theodore J. Mayer, Washington.

Board of Trustees—C. I. Evans, Washington; Cassius L. Stevens, Pittsburg; Thomas Grimshaw, St. Louis; Mrs. Carrie E. S. Twing, Westfield, N. Y.; Stephen D. Dye, Los Angeles.

PRESIDENT GIVEN A FLAG

Last evening's session, the final one of the Convention of the National Spiritualists' Association, was perhaps the most animated one of the week. For the musical numbers of the program, which were all the old-time songs given by the Sappho quartet, and by Miss Helene Paulson, there were persistent encores. For the spirit messages given by Mrs. Georgia Gladys Cooley, and the Soul-Readings by Mrs. E. T. Bosley, interested attention was exhibited until their conclusion, for the lectures by Rev. George W. Kates and Mrs R. S. Lillie there was hearty applause of approval.

The invocation was offered by the Rev. B. F. Austin.

An audience was present that filled the church to the doors.

But the program was broken by one event, the most pleasing one of the entire Convention to delegates and officers, and which found much of its significance in the common history of all the twelve preceding conventions. Partially in recognition of his ability as a presiding officer, partially in token of the signal of honor bestowed upon him by the Association in choosing him as its President thirteen times in succession, and in large measure because of the work done by him for the cause of Spiritualism, President Harrison D. Barrett was presented during the course of the evening with a magnificent silk flag by the lady delegates.

Just after a song by the Sappho quartet, President Maxwell of the Minnesota Spiritualist Association took the chair and called upon Mrs. M. E. Cadwallader, the delegate from Philadelphia, who made the presentation address in behalf of the ladies of the convention.

The unanimous re-election of the entire board of trustees was the signal for a storm of applause, it being considered that this action by the convention was an endorsement of the work accomplished by them the entire year. Mr. Hudson Tuttle was elected Editor-at-Large; Lyman C. Howe, Historian, and John W. Ring, Superintendent of the Lyceum work. The convention passed into history as one of the most successful of any held. The delegates were earnest in seeking to do all in their power to promote harmony and do efficient work. The reports of the committees are a sample of the character of the business transacted by the delegates. Every important issue that related to the interests of the Spiritualists of the world was carefully considered. The action of the delegates in selecting Chicago as the place of their next annual conclave was a wise choice.

JAPAN AND RUSSIA.

Witte has a head, but not a heart,
Japan chooses the better part;
The world will bless the little Japs,
More and more, as time shall elapse.

Better do right and suffer wrong,
Than to the horrid war prolong;
It requires more courage to yield
Than fight upon the battlefield

Too many lives have been sacrificed,
Better methods can be devised,
Even if censured for doing right,
Wrong purpose never yields delight.

Brave enough to be called a coward
Is to be most richly dowered;
Do the right if the heavens fall!
This wise injunction is for all!

THE CAUSE IN TEXAS.

Some Words From the Secretary of the State Association.

The First Progressive Spiritualist Society of Smithville, Texas, is still in the ring, and is now dealing very successfully with the spiritual unfoldment, and is on the progressive road.

We are expecting to have with us soon Mrs. Isa Wilson Kayner, who is a favorite with the Spiritualists here and the different parts of the state, and welcome her with thankfulness and gratitude of having as true noble and grand a medium as our state missionary, as is our good sister. She has made many warm friends in Smithville during her several visits, and always winning many to her in her usual lovable and motherly way, and it will be with hearts full of welcome and good will extended her from this society, whenever she comes this way.

I have just returned home from our state convention, lately held in Dallas, Texas, which proved under the management of Mrs. Laura B. Payne, a grand success.

I want to extend my sincere thanks to one and all of the friends who have been so kind in assisting me the past year, and I have tried to labor as successfully as I could, on the official board of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists as their secretary, and I wish again to thank those in the Lone Star state for the honor conferred upon me, in my re-election to the office, and I trust that one and all through the state and elsewhere will be as kind and prompt in replies to my letters as they have been during the past year, and that this year may bring forth much fruit and prove to be the banner year of the Texas State National Association of Spiritualists. May all in the state have the work of truth at heart, and work in unity for its progression.

HAS VISION HER HUSBAND IS ILL.

Mrs. Florence Ackley, a Chicago Singer, Reaches Cleveland Too Late to See Him Alive.

Mrs. Florence Ackley, a Chicago singer, had a premonition that her husband, Thad Ackley, a violinist, was ill at Cleveland, Ohio, and she left that evening for the Ohio city. On her arrival she learned that her husband had died suddenly an hour before her train arrived in the city. "I had a vision, said Mrs. Ackley, "in which I saw my husband dying. Vague at first, the impression grew upon me so that I was forced to take the first train for Cleveland. Still I was too late—my husband was dead when I reached his bedside."—Chicago Examiner.

A LITTLE OF THE GOOD.

A little sun, a little rain,
A soft wind blowing from the west,
And woods and fields are sweet again,
And warmth within the mountain's breast.

So simple is the earth we tread,
So quick with love and life her frame,
Ten thousand years have dawned and fled,
And still her magic is the same.

A little love, a little trust,
A soft impulse, a sudden dream,
And life as dry as desert dust
Is fresher than a mountain stream.

So simple is the heart of man,
So ready for new hope and joy,
Ten thousand years since it began
Have left it younger than a boy.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

O. F.: Q. I wish advice as to a nephew of mine. We began going to circles a year ago. Now this young man goes into a trance at every seance, and we have great difficulty in bringing him out. He appears in such agony that we fear he may die. The next day he complains of a headache, and is prostrate with weariness.

A. If the seance has such deleterious effect the only remedy is not to furnish the cause. That the influence produces such results indicates a state of nervous derangement and exhaustion, and persisted in might lead to most undesirable prostration.

It is not to be understood that there is danger of what is called "obsession," which is a fad name, applied to almost every nervous disorder, but a nervous prostration may be produced which will be difficult to control, and may be of long continuance.

With such symptoms of deficient vital force, the young man is on the brink of danger, even if he does not attend seances. A more vigorous life in the open air, and observance of the conditions requisite for health, are with him imperative, if he does not succumb to the abnormal state which he is in.

Mrs. M. A. F.: Q. I enclose a clipping which makes, it seems to me a very just demand, and would it not be well for Spiritualists to prove their cause by following the suggestion made?

An opportunity is to be afforded our Spiritualistic friends to prove what has never been proven heretofore—that the souls of the departed not only revisit the pale glimpses of the moon, but that they may lend material aid to their friends who still inhabit the flesh. Mrs. Mary E. Schall, a medium of St. Louis, claims to have located (spiritually) $80,000 in gold which is thought to have been buried by Indians in Hardin county, Iowa. Mrs. Schall and her friend, Mrs. Murphy, have written to Gov. Cummins of Iowa, offering to discover the treasure and turn it over to the state, provided that the governor will send them transportation to and from the site of the buried gold. Gov. Cummins comes back with a counter proposition to allow the ladies to keep all the gold they may find, if they provide their own transportation. And there the matter rests.

We trust that some enterprising railroad will now step into the breach and provide the necessary transportation. It is an opportunity of too great import, both to Spiritualists and skeptics, to be ignored. If it can be proved that spirits can find lost articles, or will direct the living where to find them, the world will not be slow to accept the belief. This is a grossly material and practical age, and has been slow to accept the doctrine of Spiritualism because the "spooks" have really done nothing useful. We may wonder at table-tipping, slate-writing, bell-ringing, etc.; but "cui bono"? Such things do not help us, and as entertainment they do not equal vaudeville. But let the spirits show us where the clothes-brush has disappeared to, or where we can find the missing $5 bill that we are sure we had in our pocket when we started home, and we will become converts at once and keep in constant communication with the citizens of the ghostly world.—St. Louis paper.

Apparently this is a fair proposition, and the writer is honest in his opinion. Many Spiritualists judge the value of their cause on the same plane of utility. The spirits, if of any value to man, must become Pinkerton detectives. If they cannot tell us where we have carelessly mislaid the hair-brush, or $5 bill we thought we had, then "cui bono!"

There are sleuths, servants and errand boys enough in this world without calling on the spirit realm. If there is one thing that should be emphasized it is that the mission of Spiritualism is to spiritualize. Of materiality—the muck-doctrine of getting a living; of getting ahead, there is sufficiency already, and to spare. The truth of Spiritualism is not to be tested by detective work, or the help spirits may give in earthly affairs. It is true that occasions may come when spirit friends, seeing the great necessities of those near to them, may give them great assistance, but as a general expression the influence of spirits must be spiritual and lead away from material things.

What would be the verdict if this same test was applied to religion? If religion cannot find our missing hair-brushes, or restore five-dollar bills to our pockets "cui bono?" The answer is plain, religion is not for such purposes. It is not to encourage neglect of duties, but attention to all duties and obligations—to lift up the mind in devotion to the highest ideal.

If this proposition was made to science, it would seen the drivel of an idiot. "What good your calculating eclipses, or passing of planets? Get to something practical, that will give us dollars and cents. Tell us of our lost hair-brushes, then you will be some use to us."

What is more, the spirits who venture on this border of materiality and communicate about lost treasures and worldly business, are on the selfish—earth plane. They are rightly called "earth bound," and if falsehoods and deceptions are met with in intercourse with them, there should not be disappointment. They are to be expected, and will be the constant accompaniment of all such communications.

Spiritualists should scorn the proposition to make such a test of spiritmated and judged by their spiritual influences. Let us not be beguiled to drag into the mire of everyday worldly antagonism this angel philosophy, or allow it to be measured by its usefulness to the money grabber. Spiritualism, if it be true to its name, is too sacred, too sublimely exalted in purpose to be thus prostituted.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charmingly Interesting Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

After supper—such a lovely supper as it was—Mrs. Lee asked me to come into her room. She said she wanted to have a nice little talk with me while Clifton showed Mother around the gardens. We went into a beautiful room and sat upon a sofa with lovely soft pillows upon it and Mrs. Lee was just as nice as could be, but I felt uneasy as if something was going to happen.

After some little conversation about plants and flowers which she noticed I am very fond of, she told me that Clifton had told her that I had some novel experiences while I was with my aunt, but she was sorry I took them so seriously. She said my aunt must be a very innocent and confiding lady to be deceived for such a length of time. She said that now I was at home where everything is quiet and free from evil influences I would be all right, and she patted my hand and told me it did not look as if it was made to do hard dirty work. I told her she was mistaken in me, that I should never forget the experiences I had while I was with Aunt Laura and Mrs. Austin, and I never wanted to, but if she thought me free from such influences at home she was mistaken, for stranger things had happened in my own home than I had ever seen anywhere else.

She seemed surprised, and asked me to tell her about it, and I did so. She asked me many questions and I answered them frankly.

For a little while she sat still and looked at me. Then her whole manner changed and her face grew soft and tender, and she took my hand in hers and said in a very different tone, "You are a good girl, Martha, and I like you. You have got in you the making of a noble woman. I am going to tell you something—yes, for this once at least I am going to lay all pretensions aside and be myself. Martha, my husband died a firm believer in Spiritualism."

I know I started, but before I could say a word she went on:

"No one but myself knows it, I have never dared tell Clifton. I don't know, I can't even imagine what makes him so bitter, unjust and unreasonable about such things. To speak the word Spiritualism is sufficient to awaken all the bad there is in him. I feel that there must be some deep-seated reason for such antipathy, but I cannot fathom it."

She sighed and her face was very sad. After a moment she went on: "Mr. Lee was sick a long time, and Clifton was in college and was not at home for any length of time, so he never happened to see any of the strange sights his father and I saw. I could talk to you until to-morrow morning, Martha, and then leave some of the strange occasions untold."

"Then you are a Spiritualist!" I exclaimed joyfully.

She smiled and said, "I know the so-called dead can and often do make themselves seen and heard and felt, but it is of you and Clifton I want to talk. I have hoped and prayed that my husband would return and convince our son that his father still lives and loves us as he used to do, but I have no reason to think my prayer has ever been answered. You are a medium, Martha, and I feel sure that through you Clifton will in time become convinced of the truth, and all will be well. I know he will ask—yes insist that you promise not to have anything more to do with Spiritualists or Spiritualism, but if you are shrewd you will manage to exempt your private life from the promise and then we will be free, you and I, dear, to plan for ourselves. I will tell you for your encouragement," she said eagerly, "that in my own church there are ten members who are firm believers in spirit return, but not for a fortune would they have it known. But we, they are all ladies, can form ourselves into a woman's club of some sort and meet in the parlors of our various homes once a week if we like, and in that way, my dear child, you can use your priceless gift and comfort many a sad heart. Church creeds have no power to comfort the broken-hearted nor to dry the tears of the mourner. O Martha," she exclaimed as she looked at me piteously, "you have no idea of the sorrow and wretchedness concealed by lace and diamonds. You think I must be happy because I have a good home, fine clothes and beautiful things about me, but I would exchange it all for the humblest home in this town if I could have with it the love I crave and the power you possess of receiving messages from the spirit world. O, if I could only see my husband once more, or if he could speak but one word to me"—she paused and began to sob.

I felt so sorry for her I never stopped to think what I was doing, but put my arms around her neck and kissed her. She hugged me closely to her and cried all the harder for a minute, and then she got control of herself and went on:

"I would not have you sacrifice yourself for my sake, dear child, but you do not know how I long for a daughter's love and companionship."

Just then we heard Mother and Clifton come in, and Mrs. Lee arose, but before we passed out of the room she kissed me and said, "You have got to lead your own life and do your own work, Martha. Do what you think is right always, regardless of what others think or say. Be true to your higher self at whatever cost."

Those were her last words to me, except to say good bye, and I feel as if they cost her a great effort.

Mother talked all the way home about how poor we are and how wealthy Mrs. Lee is. I never knew before that there is a mortgage on our farm, but it seems there is and it is to be paid to Mrs. Lee. I was surprised. Mother said if I was not to be married soon I would have to go out to work. She talked about the nice clothes I would have after I was married and the places I would go to, and it seemed to me she thought of everything nice for the future and everything disagreeable for the present. Then she went on to say that probably Mrs. Lee would want me to join their church and it wouldn't matter if I didn't believe the whole creed; I could tell the minister I didn't, and she guessed he would fix it for me so it would be all right.

"Mother," I said, "don't you believe any more that the Lord is coming soon?"

She started as guiltily as I used to when she caught me near the sugar bowl and said hastily, "Why, of course I b'lieve He's comin'. What made ye think of that jest now?"

"If He is coming right away," I said, "I don't see why you need to care whether I marry Mr. Lee or not. I don't see what good the money and the clothes will do me seeing the Lord will burn them when he comes."

She looked at me suspiciously, but seeing me very sober she replied, "We can't say jest for certain when He'll come. If He comes right off you won't be any worse on't for havin' good things, and if He don't come for quite a spell a little property will be real handy to have."

I was glad when night came and I was alone in my room. I hoped and prayed that some spirit friend would come and tell me what to do, but none did. A whole week went by and I saw nothing of Clifton, and I think it was the hardest week of my life. I had never thought of myself as being weak and cowardly, but I began to suspect I might be, for sometimes I wanted to die and get out of it all. I called and called, but not one thing did I see or hear of the superhuman until a week from the day we went to see Mrs. Lee. That morning early I was awakened by a voice speaking my name. I sat up and heard these words: "Let this be the unvarying rule of your life and know that it is the will of God that you should choose your own course according to the best light you have, and then go steadily and unhesitatingly onward with faith and hope until a clearer light is given you."

That night Clifton came. He had an elegant new carriage and a handsome horse, and he asked me to ride with him. I wanted to go, but I would not. We went out into the orchard. I felt that he was angry with me, for his face was stern and hard. As soon as we were out of Charlie's hearing he burst out:

"I hear strange stories about you, Martha!"

I could not think what he meant, and said so. He looked at me sternly and said:

"Cousin Flora told me that when she was passing the Blake farm this week she saw you come out of the house and hurry away toward home. She was curious to know what my intended wife could be doing in a place like that, so she walked slowly back and seeing Mrs. Blake come out by the road she asked her if you were there and the old woman said that you had gone home, but Flora drew from her the greatest yarn about her daughter's spirit coming back and talking to her through you—bosh! What do you mean by such conduct? Don't you know better than to associate with such a low class as the Blakes?"

A wave of something seemed to roll over me and I felt as if I was six feet tall and large accordingly, and I looked down on Clifton Lee and he looked small and mean to me, and I laughed. O it was so strange, Marah, I cannot understand it but I was calm and strong, and that was the main thing. I told him that I was passing by the house and saw Mrs. Blake in the yard and something in her bent figure, white hair, and pale, sad face filled me with pity. Then it seemed to me the woman was my mother and I must go and comfort her and tell her that she had not lost me, that I still lived and loved her. The feeling grew so strong I went and told her what I have told you. The woman began to cry and asked me to go in the house and I did. She called her husband and her sister and we sat down. I do not know now what I said to her but I am sure it was what her daughter wanted me to. When I came away they were all crying, and Mrs. Blake prayed God to bless and keep me, and said I had brought her the only hope or comfort she had got since her daughter's death."

Clifton listened to my story impatiently, and when I had finished he said, sneeringly: "It is all very beautiful and affecting I have no doubt, but you understand I do not associate with a young lady who associates with such people as the Blakes."

"I do not understand you," I said; "they are old and feeble and very poor, but they are honest, respectable people. You profess to be a follower of Jesus Christ, and only a short time ago you urged me to accept your religion, but I think the one I have comes much nearer being the genuine article. When Christ was on earth he went about among the poor and ill and lowly, did He not?"

Clifton shrugged his shoulders and said coldly, "I suppose. He did, but please remember that you are not Jesus Christ. Now we come to a vital question: Will you or will you not promise me that from this day henceforth you will have nothing more to do with Spiritualism or anything pertaining to it?"

As I was about to answer he continued: "You know what this means, Martha, so do not be in haste and make a mistake. If you make this promise that detestable word Spiritualism and the subject we have been discussing shall never be mentioned between us again. We will hasten the preparations for our marriage and all that love and a limited amount of money can do for anyone will be done for you, little one," he said, very gently.

"And if I refuse to make the promise, what then?" I asked.

"Then our engagement is ended, and you renounce a devoted husband, a beautiful home and the hundred and one things that make a woman happy and life desirable. But you will not do it, little one. Tell me, dearest, that my love means something to you now."

I stood still and thought as I never had before. There seemed to be two of me. One said, "Martha Weston, don't be a fool and condemn yourself to a life of poverty and drudgery. Let your religion take care of itself; you can believe it if it is called by some other name and your spirit friends can come to you just as well in a big house as in a little one. What good will you ever do in the world if you refuse to give your promise? I guess the sun will rise without any of your assistance. Just mind your own business and let other people's beliefs alone."

The other one of me said, "Martha Janet Weston, do you be true to yourself and your highest convictions of right. Happiness comes from within and does not depend upon outward conditions. Joy and peace are born of the spirit, and drudgery and poverty cannot rob you of spiritual wealth. Love seeks not its own pleasure to the exclusion of another's, but is unselfish and kind. Love tramples not upon anyone's conviction of right, but is patient and respectful. Better be free to lead your own life in your own way, even though it be in poverty, than to be a slave in a palace."

Then there came to me a sensing of spiritual things and I seemed to be lifted up and away from myself. I heard not a word spoken but I felt the presence of many, and sensed entire sentences as one word. As I look back to it, it seems to me I lived a week in those few minutes.

Clifton's voice recalled me to earth. He was saying, "Well, little girl, you are not quite ready to throw away my love, are you?"

His voice was tender and pleading, and I never saw him look so handsome before as he did then, with the golden light of the sinking sun shining full upon him. He put out his hands to me, and for a moment I wavered. Yes, Marah, I did, although I had first stood in the gateway of heaven. I felt that I then and there must choose between the material and the spiritual and I chose the latter. The moment I made my choice a great peace and strength came to me and I said calmly:

"No, I will be free to say and do what I believe to be right. I will not give you the promise you ask. Good bye."

I turned to fly, not wanting to say another word, but he caught me by my arm and said hoarsely, "Child, you are mad, you cannot know what you are doing. You imagine you are going to do great things and reconstruct society and convert the world to a belief in ghosts, but you will find out when you come to try it that some will laugh at you, some scorn you, some find fault with your best efforts and none will thank you. I tell you, Martha, I know the world much better than you do, and I know you will never alter it in any way, even though you give your life in the attempt. You will get over this infatuation in the course of a few months and then as you toil on day after day doing drudgery nature has never fitted you for, you will utterly regret your decision to-night. Your ideas may be beautiful and comforting to those who are imaginative enough to hold them, but when it comes down to everyday life they are useless, as you will learn to your sorrow. Spirit friends, as you call your phantoms, will not do your work for you, furnish your clothing, pay bills, nor mortgages. Is know what I am talking about."

"And I know," said I, "that a tall, slender man with curling dark hair and large dark eyes is standing right beside you now. He looks very sad and motions me away from you with a large sheet of writing paper he holds in his hands."

"My God! it is my father," burst from Clifton's lips, and looking at him I saw he was a deathly white and trembling visibly.

I stood still, not knowing what to do for a moment and then a compelling power came upon me. "Good bye," I said. "I wish you only good, and always think of me as a friend." I walked rapidly away and saw him no more. Two days later I heard he had started for the far north.

O Marah, dear, what have I done? I don't know why I ask, for I know I have done right. I told father all about it, and he said, "You have done well, Mardie; you are a true Weston and I am proud of you."

I have not said a word about the matter to mother, but judging by symptoms I shall catch it soon. I am very much interested in your happiness. Please write just as soon as you can.

Lovingly yours,

MARTHA WESTON.

A WANDERER'S TRAVELS.

Will J. Erwood Writes of His Work in Various Places.

To the Editor:—In my last letter, in which were notes of the camp work at Ottawa, Kansas, I overlooked the name of J. E. White, who was one of the visiting mediums at the camp. The writer had the privilege of visiting one of his "fire test" seances in which he played with flames and fire with an abandon that was not altogether conducive to the comfort of the author of these lines. I would very much rather someone else had that phase than myself, though it shows very great control of spirit over matter.

Lawrence, Kansas, was the first point visited after leaving the Ottawa Camp. A very pleasant visit was enjoyed there. Three meetings were held, the audience and interest growing nightly. Being entertained in the home of Bro. H. W. Henderson, and meeting so many good, earnest souls, made my stay very home-like indeed and it was with regret that I turned my face away from Lawrence and Lawrence friends.

From there a short trip was made to Burlington, Kansas. This is a conservative little town in which the spirit of progress has not yet been aroused to action.

Four meetings were held here—these were not largely attended, though the people who did come were of the "thinking" order, and the speaker was accorded the closest attention throughout.

While here the writer enjoyed the hospitality of Brother and Sister Sheets who are ardent advocates of the new old truths of Spiritualism. There is need of work in Burlington, for there are many who are striving to break the shell of conservatism.

The next place to be made the "breathing spot" of the Wanderer was Wichita, Kansas, a place which seemed indeed to bespeak a welcome home for here the writer found his good old-time friends of Clear Lake, Iowa, Mr. and Mrs. David Vandenburg, in whose pleasant home he was entertained.

This town is a beautiful little city of homes; and the citizens are of the progressive, wide-awake type. Three good meetings were held here, the audience doubling in size each night. Mrs. E. J. Jaquet of Chicago, is making a visit to this town, holding successful meetings every Sunday. She honored our meeting with her presence and able assistance one evening, giving many excellent messages; illness detaining her at home the balance of the time during my stay.

The second evening, conditions being just right, the writer surprised the audience by giving a few messages himself, something he very rarely does in public meetings now-a-days.

The meetings closed with great good feeling, and the writer has in mind some bright day in the future when he hopes to meet these friends again.

From Wichita a quick trip was made to Spring Hill, Kansas. Quick as was the trip, I found I had been beaten by one "Dan Cupid" with the inevitable result. At 5:30 p. m. Oct. 5, the knot which makes "the twain one" was tied by your scribe. The contracting parties were Dr. P. Anton Pierson and Miss May Cook, both of Spring Hill.

Many friends of the principals were present during the services, remaining for the delightful repast. The house was very tastefully decorated and everything bespoke the utmost harmony, but this could not have been otherwise for the whole event took place in the home of J. H. Pratt, which has long been dedicated to the spirit world, and the work of the denizens thereof.

Readers of the Spiritualist press and "Rending the Vail" will remember the Pratt home. While there it was also the writer's privilege to meet Brother J. H. Nixon, Mr. and Mrs. House, and several other old time Spiritualists more or less connected with the work of Spring Hill.

Spring Hill, by the way, honored the writer by giving him the smallest audiences to which he has ever spoken. Aside from this, a most pleasant visit was enjoyed there. The sound of the "wedding bells" still ring in our ears—how could a visit under such circumstances be other than pleasant?

Leaving Spring Hill, the next stop was made at Kansas City, Mo. Here your correspondent was delightfully entertained in the home of Brother and Sister Reckard. Saturday afternoon an informal reception was tendered the visitor from Wisconsin. Representatives of nearly all the societies, local workers and Spiritualists, were present, and by their cordial expression of good will did much in making the Wanderer feel at home. Among the workers present were Rev. Alice Baker, Mrs. Glen C. Stephens, Mrs. Ella Baldwin, Mrs. Pierce, Mrs. Jennie Sain, Mr. J. E. Dimett, and Mrs. Sue Drogmund, the able editor of the Kanas City Light, a new advocate of Spiritualism recently born in Kansas City.

Among the societies represented were the People's Spiritual Church, the Psychical Research, the First Spiritual, the Literary, and the School of Psychic Science.

Three meetings were held in the hall occupied by the School of Psychic Science, which is conducted by Mrs. Ella Baldwin. The musical features of the meetings were attended to by Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Drogmund, assisted by Mrs. Walruth. Mrs. Drogmund has marvelous control of the piano, and Mrs. Walruth is the proud possessor of one of the finest and most remarkable voices the writer has ever heard, being a heavy baritone. One wonders, upon hearing it, where the little lady carries it all, but when told it is largely due to spirit control, much is explained.

This closed a pleasant trip and the Wanderer has ceased his labors to spend a few days with wife and babies and old friends at Milton, Wis.

Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

A Conclusive Statement of Her Views on Spiritualism.

When in the latter part of June or the first of July, 1861, the news of the death of Elizabeth Barrett Browning was received in Fort Wayne, I observed a number of my relatives and friends weep like children. Being but sixteen years of age myself, at that time, I could not quite understand why such marked emotion should be manifested for one who lived and died so far away, and who was unknown save by the thoughts she breathed out upon the world in her sublime poetry.

I afterward discovered that a literary society to which these relatives and friends belonged were, and had for some time been engaged in studying her poetry and prose, and had become so attached to her spiritually, that they felt they were actually losing one of their own members.

I was not personally acquainted with her writings at this time. If I had been familiar with them my surprise at the feeling displayed at her death would have been still more marked, for I find that she was a Spiritualist—a Spiritualist, too, in spite of the ridicule cast upon the subject of Spiritualism by many of her friends, including her own husband, Robert Browning, who was himself a great poet. At this period I would have also shared in the husband's ridicule of the subject, but now it is difficult for me to understand how any man or woman can be a true poet without being a true Spiritualist, consciously or unconsciously.

I have heard it quite frequently denied that Elizabeth Barrett Browning was a Spiritualist. The following extracts from her letters ought to settle the question. The scientists of that day, among whom may be mentioned the great chemist Faraday, explained the phenomena of Spiritualism (table-tipping etc.,) upon the theory of unconscious muscular activity of the medium. But Mrs. Browning took a different view of it as follows

"You will have seen Faraday's letter. I wish to reverence men of science, but they often will not let me. If I know certain facts on this subject, Faraday ought to have known them before he expressed an opinion on it. His statement does not meet the facts of the case,—it is a statement which applies simply to various amateur operations without touching on the essential phenomena, such as the moving of tables, untouched by a finger."

In a letter to an intimate friend she wrote as follows:

"If I am right, you will none of you be able to disbelieve much longer; a new law, or a new development of law, is making way everywhere. We have heard much,—more than I can tell you in a letter. Imposture is absolutely out of the question, to speak generally; and unless you explain the phenomena by 'a personality unconsciously projected' (which requires explanation of itself), you must admit the spirit theory. As to the simpler forms of the manifestation (it is all one manifestation), the 'turning tables,' I was convinced long before Faraday's letter that many of the amateur performances were from involuntary muscular action—but what then? These are only imitations of actual phenomena. Faraday's letter does not meet the common fact of tables being moved and lifted without the touch of a finger. It is a most arrogant letter and singularly inconclusive. Tell me any facts you may hear."

In another letter to a friend she thus writes

"By the way, I heard read the other day a very interesting letter from Paris, from Mr. Appleton, Longfellow's brother-in-law, who is said to be a man of considerable ability, and who is giving himself wholly just now to the investigation of this spirit subject, termed by him the 'sublimest conundrum ever given to the world for guessing.' He appears still in doubt whether the intelligence is external, or whether the phenomena are not produced by an unconscious projection in the medium of a second personality accompanied with clairvoyance and attended by physical manifestations. This seems to me to double the difficulty; yet the idea is entertained as a doubtful sort of hypothesis by such men as Sir Edward Lytton and others. Imposture is absolutely out of the question, be certain, as an ultimate solution, and a greater proof of credulity can scarcely be given than a belief in imposture as things are at present.

"But I was going to tell you Mr. Appleton has a young American friend in Paris, who, 'besides being a very sweet girl' says he, 'is a strong medium.' By Lamartine's desire he took her to the poet's house; 'all the phenomena were reproduced, and everybody present convinced,' Lamartine himself 'in ecstasies.' Among other spirits came Henry Clay, who said, 'J'aime Lamartine.' We shall have it in the next volume of biography. Louis Napoleon gets oracles from the 'raps,' and it is said that the Czar does the same,— your Emperor, certainly,—and the King of Holland is allowing the subject to absorb him. 'Dying out! Dying out!' Our accounts from New York are very different, but unbelieving persons are apt to stop their ears and exclaim, 'We hear nothing now.' On one occasion the Hebrew Professor at New York was addressed in Hebrew, to his astonishment."

Upon another occasion Mrs. Browning thus wrote:

"As far as I am concerned, I never heard or read a single communication which impressed me in the least; what does impress me is the probability of there being communications at all. I look at the movement. What are these intelligences, separated yet relating and communicating? What is their state? What their aspiration? Have we had part or shall we have part with them? Is this the corollary of man's life on the earth? or are they unconscious echoes of his embodied soul? That any one should admit a fact (such as a man being lifted into the air, for instance), and not be interested in it, is so foreign to the habits of my mind (which can't insulate a fact from an inference, and rest there) that I have not a word to say

* * * *

"No truth can be dangerous. What if Jesus Christ be taken for a medium, do you say? Well, what then? As perfect man, He possessed, I conclude, the full complement of a man's faculties. But if He walked on the sea as a medium, if the virtue went out of Him as a mesmerizer, He also spoke the words which never man spoke, was born for us, and died for us, and rose from the dead as the Lord God our Savior. But the whole theory of Spiritualism, all the phenomena, are strikingly confirmatory of revelation; nothing strikes me more than that Hume's argument against miracles (a strong argument) disappears before it, and Strauss' conclusions from a priori assertion of impossibility fell in pieces at once."

At another time Mrs. Browning wrote:

"Every fact is a word of God, and I call it irreligious to say, 'I will deny this because it displeases me.' 'I will look away from that because it will do me harm.' Why be afraid of the truth? God is in the truth, and He is called also, Love. The evil results of certain experiences of this class result mainly from the superstitious and distorted views held by most people concerning the spiritual world. We have to learn —we in the body—that death does not teach all things. Death is simply an accident. Foolish Jack Smith who died on Monday is on Tuesday still foolish Jack Smith. If people who on Monday scorned his opinions prudently will on Tuesday receive his least words as oracles, they very naturally may go mad, or at least do something as foolish as their inspirer is. Also, it is no argument against any subject, that it drives people mad who suffer themselves to be absorbed in it. That would be an argument against all religion, and all love, by your leave.

"Ask the Commissioner of Lunacy; knock at the door of mad-houses in general, and inquire what two causes act almost universally in filling them. Answer,—love and religion. The common objection of the degradation of knocking with the leg of the table, and the ridicule of the position for a spirit etc., I don't understand it at all. Twice I have been present at table experiments, and each time I was deeply impressed —impressed, there's the word for it? The panting and shivering of that dead dumb wood, the human emotion conveyed through it—by what?—had to me a greater significance than the St. Peter's of this Rome. O poet! do you not know that poetry is not confined to the clipped alleys, no, nor to the blue tops of 'Parnassus hill?'

"'Poetry is where we live and have our being—wherever God works and man understands. * * * If you are in a dungeon and a friend knocks through the outer wall, spelling out by knocks the words you comprehend, you don't think the worse of the friend standing in the sun who remembers you. He is not degraded by it, you rather think. Now apply this."

From another letter written by Mrs. Browning, I take the following:

"As to the 'supernatural,' if you mean by that the miraculous, the suspension of natural law, I certainly believe in it no more than you do. What happens, happens according to a natural law, the development of which only becomes fuller and more observable. The movement, such as it is, is accelerated, and the whole structure of society in America is becoming affected more or less for good or evil, and very often for evil, through the extreme tenacity or slowness of those who ought to be leaders in every revolution of thought, but who, on this subject, are pleased to leave their places to the unqualified and the fanatical. Wise men will be sorry presently. When Faraday was asked to go and see Hume, to see a heavy table lifted without the touch of a finger, he answered that 'he had not time.' Time has its 'revenges.'"

That time has had its revenges since the above was written is proven by the recent scientific researches of such men as Hodgson, James, Hyslop, Rev. Minot J. Savage, Rev. Dr. Heber Newton, Prof. T. J. Hudson, Rev. Dr. Funk and scores of other leaders in scientific and theological thought of the present day.

And right here is an opportune place to introduce an extract from Sir William Crookes', address as president of the British Association of Scientists, delivered six or seven years ago. Prof. Crookes; it will be remembered, was one of the few noted scientists who accepted the Spiritualistic hypothesis nearly forty years ago, at a time when his scientific brethren regarded such acceptance as hazardous, ill-advised and premature. But the time which has elapsed since then has only strengthened his convictions upon the subject and added to his own great name the names of many illustrious scientists of the present time who share his convictions of the truth of Spiritualism. But here is what he says in his address:

"These then, are some of the subjects, weighty and far-reaching, on which my own attention has been chiefly concentrated. Upon one other interest I have not yet touched,—to me the weightiest and the farthest reaching of all. No incident in my scientific career is more widely known than the part I took many years ago in the certain psychic researches. Thirty years have passed since I published an account of experiments tending to show that outside a scientific knowledge there exists a force exercised by intelligence differing from the ordinary intelligence common to mortals. * * * * And were I now introducing for the first time these inquiries to the world of science, I would choose a starting-point from that of old. It would be well to begin with telepathy; with the fundamental law, as I believe it to be, that thoughts and images may be transferred from one mind to another without teh agency of the recognized organs of sense,—that knowledge may enter the human mind without being communithe agency of the recognized organs of sense."

To return again to the subject of this communication, I record several more extracts from the letters of Elizabeth Barrett Browning:

"Why do we make no quicker advances, do you say? Why are our communications chiefly trivial? Why, but because we ourselves are trivial, and don't bring serious souls and concentrated attentions and holy aspirations to the spirits who are waiting for these things? Spirit comes to spirit by affinity, says Swedenborg; but our cousinship is not with the high and noble. * *

"If you have seen Sir David Brewster lately I should like to know whether he has had more experience concerning the tables, and has modified his conclusions in any respect. I myself am convinced as I can be of any fact, that there is an external intelligence; the little I have seen is conclusive to me. And this makes me more anxious that the subject should be examined with common fairness by learned persons. Only the learned won't learn—that's the worst of them. Their hands are too full to gather simples. It seems to me a new development of law in the human constitution, which has worked before in exceptional cases, but now works in general."

Upon another occasion she wrote:

"Don't fall out of heart with investigation. It takes patient investigation to establish the number of legs of a newly remarked fly. Nothing 'riles' me so much as the dogmatism of the people who pronounce on there being nothing to see, because in half a dozen experiments, perhaps, they have seen nothing conclusive.

'Yet could not all creation pierce
Beyond the bottom of his eye.'

Mediums cheat certainly. So do people who are not mediums."

"I don't think that you apprehend Swedenborg's meaning very accurately. If he saw sin and danger in certain communications, why did he consider it a privilege on his own part to live in the world of spirits as he did? True, he spoke of 'danger,' but it was to those who, themselves weak and unclean, did not hold 'by the Lord.' He distinctly said that in the first unfallen churches there was incessant communion, and that the new church, as it grew, would approximate more and more to that earlier condition. There is a distinct prospect given in Swedenborg of an increasing aptitude in men in the physical body toward communication with those who have passed out from the body. I consider that he foresaw not only what we are seeing, but greater and more frequent phenomena of the same class. The teachings of Spiritualism are much like the teachings in the world. There are excellent things taught and iniquitous things taught."

While I originally intended to devote this contribution to the memory and writings of the lamented Elizabeth Barrett Browning, upon the subject of Spiritualism, it may not be amiss to convert it into a sort of melange or symposium and reproduce the thoughts of other noted people upon the same subject.

It was Addison, I believe, who, as far back as 1710, thus wrote:

"For my own part, I am apt to join in the opinion with those who believe that all the regions of nature swarm with spirits; and that we have multitudes of spectators on all our actions, when we think ourselves most alone; but instead of terrifying myself, with such a notion, I am wonderfully pleased to think that I am always engaged with such an innumerable society in searching out the wonders of the creation, and joining in the same concert of praise and adoration. Milton has finely described this mixed communion of men and spirits in Paradise; and had doubtless his eye upon a verse in old Hesiod, which is almost word for word the same with his third line in the following passage:

* * * 'Nor think, though men were none,
That heaven would want spectators, God want praise;
Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth
Unseen, both when we wake and when we sleep;
All these with ceaseless praise his works behold
Both day and night. How often from the steep
Of echoing hill or thicket have we heard
Celestial voices, to the midnight air,
Sole, or responsive each to other's note,
Singing their great Creator? Oft in bands,
While they keep watch, or nightly rounding walk,
With heavenly touch of instrumental sounds,
In full harmonic number joined, their songs
Divide the night, and lift our thought to heaven."

It was Canon Wilberforce who uttered the following

"It is a strengthening, calming consideration that we are in the midst of an invisible world of energetic and glorious life, a world of spiritual beings than whom we have been made for a little while lower. Blessed be God for the knowledge of a world like this. It is evidently that region or condition of space in which the departed find themselves immediately after death; probably it is nearer than we imagine, for Saint Paul speaks of our being surrounded by a cloud of witnesses. There, it seems to me, they are waiting for us."

But while we have here and there a preacher in the orthodox pulpit like Canon Wilberforce, Rev, Drs. Heber Newton and Isaac K. Funk, Bishop Fallows, Minot J. Savage, and a few others who accept and preach the Spiritualistic doctrine, philosophy, or grand central truth of spirit communication, the existence of spirit distinct from matter, the possibility of communion with the spirit world, and the return of the departed, for some unaccountable reason the great majority of the ministers of the gospel of Jesus Christ, full of the evidences of the truth of Spiritualism, ignore the subject entirely, thus constituting themselves a great factor in the establishment of a doctrine they seek but are powerless to combat—that of materialism. Materialism, agnosticism and infidelity are the natural, legitimate results of the pulpit's attitude toward the subject of Spiritualism, and is the logical explanation why it is losing its hold upon the masses. If the pulpit can not speak with the assurance of one who knows by incontrovertible evidence and experience that death does not end all, it can have but a very indifferent, transient, questionable influence upon the pew. If materialism is untrue, then its antithesis, its logical opposite which is Spiritualism, must be true. If the spirit dies with the body, if death ends all, then materialism must be true. If the spirit survives the body, if death does not end all, and Spiritualists have unanswerable, satisfactory proof thereof by having received communications from the dead explainable by no other theory or hypothesis, then there can be no question or doubt of the truth of Spiritualism. Why, then, should the orthodox church ridicule, antagonize and reject the subject or seek to ignore it by maintaining a "discreet silence" upon it with the view of treating it with "silent contempt?" The time has arrived, however, when its 'silence' ceases to be 'discreet' and its "silent contempt" has lost its force. The pew wants to know whether materialism or Spiritualism is true and it very naturally expects this information from the pulpit. To the extent of the ability of the pulpit to satisfactorily answer this question will be the measure of the parishioner's interest in his church.

Notwithstanding the studied silence of the church on the subject of Spiritualism, it is becoming more and more influenced by the teachings of the latter. I have before me as I write an associated press dispatch announcing the resignation of the noted Methodist divine in England, the Rev. Dr. Joseph Agar Beet, from his position as head of the Wesleyan College in London, because he no longer believed in "a material hell and everlasting physical torment." He cannot preach this fossilized doctrine any longer. Whether he is aware that his renouncing and denouncing it is the result of the influence of Spiritualism upon the thought of the world, I cannot determine, but I opine that he is more familiar with its philosophy and religion than he has yet revealed.

While the church has been all these years engaged in ridiculing the subject of Spiritualism, Spiritualism has ridiculed the church's doctrine of "a material hell, everlasting physical torment, infant damnation, predestination," etc. Spiritualism has well withstood the church's ridicule, has not only held its own and constantly progressed, but has now the satisfaction of witnessing the conversion to its doctrines of such men as the above-mentioned Rev. Dr. Joseph Agar Beet of England Methodism.

The time is now certainly not very far distant when the orthodox church will adopt and preach Spiritualism. It must either do this or preach materialism as it has done by inference all these years past, for by the mouth of one of its prominent bishops it has confessed that it did not know that death did not end all.

In his book entitled "The Evolution of Immortality," the Rev. S. D. McConnell, D. D., D. C. L., after exhausting the merely presumptive orthodox evidences of a future life, quotes as a clincher from another scientific author, Prof. Shaler, Dean of the Scientific Faculty of Harvard, who, in his book upon "The Individual" writes as follows:

"A number of men, of no mean authority as naturalists, some of them well trained in experimental science, have, after long and apparently careful inquiry, become convinced that there is evidence of the survival of some minds after death.' "This," says Rev. Dr. McConnell, "is a conclusion which sensible men will reach very hesitatingly. The evidence if evidence it can be called, is found by an analysis of the enormous but unsavory mass of 'Spiritualism,' 'Occultism,' 'Telepathy,' 'Hypnotism,' and such like. It is a material with which sane men are very reluctant to deal. It is so contaminated by fraud, charlatanry, credulity, and hysterics that one's natural inclination is to pass by it as far on the other side of the way as the width of the road will allow.

"But, at the same time it must be confessed that there is a growing willingness to admit that 'there's something in it.' * * * It is not easy to find even an educated man who will categorically deny the assertion, that there are instances wherein one human personality communicates with another without physical media of intercourse. * * * He has the impression that he is here in the presence of some kind of natural phenomena which are real, but which are exploited by the wrong people. He is not much better satisfied when he finishes the Report of the Seybert Commission of lawyers and scientists appointed by a great university, to investigate the alleged facts. He feels that here again the question is in the wrong hands. If the set are too credulous the others are too dogmatic. * * * Nothwithstanding this urgent disinclination to meddle with, or be muddled by the problems of Spiritualism, the men of science have a natural interest in the inquiries of the few true observers who are dredging that dirty sea. Trusting to the evident scientific faithfulness of those hardy explorers, it appears evident that they have brought up from the deep certain facts which, though still shadowed by doubt, indicate the persistence of the individual consciousness ofter death. It has, moreover, to be confessed that these few as yet imperfect observations are fortified by the fact that through all the ages of his contact with nature man has firmly held to the notion that the world was peopled with disembodied individualities who could appeal to his own intelligence. Such a conviction is worth something, though it be little. Supported by any critical evidence it becomes of much value. Thus we may fairly conjecture that we may be on the verge of something like a demonstration that the individual consciousness does survive the death of the body by which it was nurtured."

Now, what does the reader think of the foregoing as coming from an eminent "D. D.," and "D. C. L."? Think of it. He acknowledges and not very gracefully either, that the only satisfactory evidence under God's heavens of a future existence, is that which has been "dredged" from the bottom of the "dirty sea of Spiritualism." It may be somewhat humiliating to get such important and valuable evidence from such a source, but what difference does it make as long as it is evidence? The diamond is often extracted from the dirtiest mire, and the pearl-diver encounters no little filth in his search for the pearl of great price. Our reverend friend would doubtless not have been satisfied with other than "bottom facts" even if "dredged from the dirty sea of Spiritualism." No matter from whence truth is obtained, it can be cleaned and polished and made to reflect the image of its author and creator,—God. H. V. SWERINGEN.

CHESTERFIELD CAMP.

All Over the State of Indiana a Feeling of Distrust of the Chesterfield Camp Has Arisen, and a Blight Has Settled on That Once Favorite Place of Resort, Which Can Only Be Dissipated by a Vigorous Effort Against the Fake Element.

To the Editor:—We receive The Progressive Thinker regularly and study it as closely as we formerly did our Bible, but with far more benefit; but we SEE and HEAR so much fraud, that we often look for that first; then the correspondents for a remedy, but they all steer clear of that, as much so as a crowd from a bomb with a lighted fuse, fearing it might explode.

There is a very good, easy, and sure remedy which all can apply, and which would reduce the fakes ninety per cent the first year: At all seances let the sitters demand strict test conditions, and if refused, not sit, and the fakes would have to get out, and leave the work to honest mediums, who then would be able to make a good living and give us something we could depend upon; but when old and established camps will send out invitations for all mediums to come and work, and make all they can, what is the public to expect?

I was at Camp Chesterfield last August where fifty-three mediums (so-called) were at work; fourteen being materializing mediums, and as one of our missionaries writes, all first-class; but I think there was one too many; the one in front of the four (14), and I am willing to donate $100 to the medium fund of the N. S. A. if anyone can show me more.

I heard while on the ground that one of our oldest Spiritualists sat through a seance, and then offered $25 for one materialized form, but the seance was closed, and nothing could be had that night; they were sick and held no seances while that person remained on the ground. It was reported to the chairman in charge who replied, "The camp must protect its mediums"; also to the president with no better result, and still they expect the public to patronize them.

Let every camp test their mediums before allowed to work, and every circle demand test conditions. Let test conditions be the watch word with every Spiritualist and fakes and frauds would soon be among the things that were. E. G.

A CALL FOR TEACHERS.
There is a large field for healers and teachers in small towns. After a little study of "Healing Currents from the Battery of Life" (by Walter DeVoe), students start groups for study and realization of the healing power.
So helpful is this book that as many as 21 copies have been sold to a group formed to hear it read. Manifestations of healing are common where students unite to study and practice the instructions given in this wonderful book. Many are willing to pay for instruction in healing truth, but there is need of energetic persons to get them together.
Those who can successfully form groups in their own town among their friends will find enjoyable and profitable work doing the same in other towns.

To Our Old Patients and Friends.
I know not if you are all living in the real life (Spirit) or not, or if you are still in the physical suffering with the cares and sickness pertaining to this life.
First, let me say that I too, have been very ill for over two years. I would get better, then another blow would come, of sorrow—sickness and sorrow, sorrow and sickness; in fact, I have been down in the dark valleys, and have suffered as few have suffered; but through it all I have felt that night would not last always, and that some time the dawn of the morning would come, and to-day I find that I am full of confidence in the love of the Father and Mother God and for all of their children, and I find that once again am I strong in the Spirit and that the dawn is coming. I have had new strength given me, and I have taken up my Medical and Spiritual work again. I know, dear friends that as I once more resume my work, I have your best wishes.
Now I will inform you of our LATEST AND GRANDEST TRUTH that has come to us. It is a new method by which we make medicines out of the green roots and herbs, gathered out of God's great garden of Nature, at just the right season of the year. It is by a process which gets rid of the EVIL EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL, which all other liquid medicines contain. Alcohol destroys the very medicinal properties in the root and herb that cures. By our method we preserve these properties. No one knows this method but ourselves. We wish you to believe us when we say that we are meeting with the most wonderful success since we began this new method. We prepare the medicine for each case, out of the fresh green root and herb. The process at present in making this medicine costs us much more money than if we used the ordinary fluid extracts and tinctures; and it takes us twice, yes, three times as long to make the medicine, but the results are just grand. Now in order to introduce this new method of curing the sick, we are offering to our old patients and friends, who may be ill, a trial treatment for only Five Dollars a month, and with this condition only, that at the end of two months' treatment they will allow us to publish the results. We are curing old chronic cases in two months' time that used to take us six months to cure, the same kind of disease; curing cases in three months' time which used to take us a year.
Now, kind friend, do you not know of some poor sick one, that, by informing them of our new method, you may be the means of restoring to health and happiness? If you do, or not, we wish to hear from you again. While this is a printed letter, still it is a personal one to you all. But I desire to tell you, my friends, of this wonderful discovery, and cannot write each one a letter. Kindly let us hear from you, giving your present address; and if ill, leading symptoms and your present weight.
Yours kindly,
DR. C. E. WATKINS.

SPIRITUALISM—Progress, the Universal Law of Nature; Thought, the Solvent of Her Problems.—SPIRITUALISM

VOL. 32. CHICAGO, ILL., NOV. 4, 1905. NO. 832

Dr. Henry Slade.

He was in many respects a most remarkable medium, and yet in his professional career he was when least expected erratic and unreliable, which often gave rise to earnest controversy. His good deeds and great service to the Cause of Spiritualism will be reared into a monument to perpetuate his memory, while the imperfections of his nature will soon be forgotten. The N. S. A. did a most commendable act in overlooking the weaknesses in his nature, and tenderly taking care of him in his poverty and old age.

DR. HENRY SLADE.

His Early History—Old Friend and Neighbor Writes Entertainingly in Regard to the Famous Slate-Writer.

Johnson's Creek, Sept. 28.

Having read with interest the articles in your columns regarding Dr. Henry Slade, I desire to correct some statements and relate some facts that came under my personal observation.

Henry Slade was not born in Johnson's Creek, but in some eastern county of this state, his parents becoming residents of this village when Henry was two years old.

He was 71 years old at the time of his death instead of 80 as has been stated. As a school boy it is stated by those who remember him, he was quiet, inoffensive and below the average in intellect, but good natured and affectionate. I have heard him relate that as a child he possessed powers that in after years made him a noted character.

On one occasion being required to write with other of the scholars of his school a composition, he produced one readily much beyond his normal powers, as well his comprehension and received a severe punishment for denying having copied it from some book or paper. Also of being punished by his mother for insisting that he saw persons in houses where he accompanied her that were invisible to others and that were so-called dead.

The slate-writing "trick" as it is called by Kellar was but one of many manifestations of psychic power that occurred through the mediumship of Dr. Slade.

To be in his company for a day or days as in the case of the writer, having entertained him on several occasions, was to witness, often most unexpectedly, a series of occurrences which often could be explained to an unprejudiced mind only as the operations of an unseen force possessing intelligence and a knowledge of occult laws and how to use them.

These were accomplished without a confederate, without trick tables, openings in floors or any of the devices or paraphernalia that are the invariable accompaniment of those who practice feats of legerdemain.

When in his early twenties Henry Slade moved with his parents to Michigan. It was about the time that the subject of the Rochester rappings and table tipping was being discussed and people all over the country were trying experiments with sitting at tables with various results.

In this manner Slade discovered that he had a variety of phases of mediumship. During a trance he was instructed to try slate-writing, to what results thousands if they were living could testify of messages written on any table, in any house to which he was invited, messages containing names of friends who had departed and conveying between sometimes locked slates, facts known only to the sitter and the friend invisible.

Messages were written in Greek and German and submitted to scholars for interpretation, which was impossible for him to write as his only education was received in a Johnson Creek district school and was confined principally, if not wholly, to the three Rs, and being anything but proficient in either. He developed also the power of diagnosing diseases and prescribing remedies and being threatened with arrest for practicing without a medical diploma he went before a medical faculty and astonished that body by the readiness with which he answered all questions, thus securing a diploma and a legal right to the title which he afterwards bore, of M. D.

The exhibition of power in lifting the heavy objects was truly wonderful. In two instances I have seen him place the tips of his fingers upon the shoulders of men, neighbors of mine, each of them weighing not less than 200 pounds and of seeing them lifted, chair and man to quite a height from the floor, then let quietly down again.

After a quarterly meeting at Yates Center which Dr. Slade attended, quite a number of people were being entertained at the home of Mr. Eli Clark. After the long supper table had been cleared, a member of the company, a gentleman, asked of Slade if he supposed he could be lifted from the floor with the table while he sat upon it. Slade asked his guides if they could do it and a response of three raps came upon the table, meaning yes.

The gentleman accordingly seated himself in the center of the table, Slade standing at the end with the fingers of one hand resting upon it. It at once began to rise until it was at least one foot from the floor, and standing there firmly and steadily until 100 was counted, was quietly replaced upon the floor.

On occasions of his visits at our house invariably when partaking of our meals the dining table would be tipped without spilling tea from cups, or water from glasses; raps would come upon the plates and an empty chair, which we would place at the end of the table remote from Slade, would perform various feats during the entire meal. Our parlor on such occasions was given up to Mr. Slade's use for sittings, we furnishing him with a pine table and purchasing his slates at our home store. People came for miles to have sittings with him, and I never knew of but one person who did not leave the room not only satisfied but enthusiastic and often strong men in tears. The one person referred to insisted upon putting a nail instead of a pencil between the slates and denounced Slade as a humbug because he refused.

The fame of his wonderful powers spread over our own country and eventually across the old world, for Slade tion he visited Europe. He was accompanied by his orphan niece, whom he adopted, Miss Agnes Slade, whom he educated in the convent of the Sacred Heart in New York, and Mr. Simmons, his secretary, and his daughter.

On his arrival in England he encountered Prof. Lankester, one of a type of those who have sought to obstruct the progress of every discovery in science or spiritual revelations from the days of Galileo even until to-day. Under an old English law which imprisoned for practicing palmistry he caused Slade to be arrested for practicing sleight-of-hand with a trick table and slates written on in a sleight-of-hand manner with the help of an accomplice.

A recent article in the New York Sun stated that he was arrested in England by Prof. Lankester and imprisoned for three months when he fled from England to more hospitable lands in which to practice his fraudulent business.

Scores of other papers have sought to villify him by like reports.

I well remember the anxiety and interest felt by friends of Henry Slade in Johnson Creek on the news of his arrest, and there are three at least living here that remember some of the particulars of the trial. The dealer who sold the table upon which the writing was produced, testified that the table was a common deal table, without a drawer and with only a plain top and legs.

The result of the long trial was published at the time when he was completely vindicated and Prof. L. discomfitted.

He was entertained by invitation by the Czar of Russia, also the Grand Duke, his brother, and gave them numerous demonstrations of his psychic powers, beside other of the crowned heads of Europe. From each of these he received costly and elegant gifts which it was his delight to display to his friends on his return home.

Among them were pieces of jewelry containing elegant diamonds and a beautiful jeweled and enameled watch, also large sums of money.

Prof. Zollner of Leipsic University, with several other professors invited Dr. Slade to a series of experiments to discover whether there was a fourth dimension in space, and if matter could be passed through matter.

He gave them his entire time for two weeks and the description as published by Prof. Zollner in a book entitled "Transcendental Psychics," was marvelous and thrilling in the extreme.

Not only was it demonstrated that there is a fourth dimension and that matter can pass through matter, but that invisible and excarnate scientists were assisting in the experiments and produced the results.

After his return from the trip to the old world he rented a brown stone house up-town in New York. His niece, Agnes, presided over his house, assisted by Mr. Simmons' daughter, both young ladies. Mr. Simmons attended to receiving callers and the correspondence and all matters of business. A schoolmate from Johnson Creek, who visited him at that time stated that his time was constantly occupied and many could not be admitted.

Carriages stood before his door almost constantly. The elite of the town visited him, telegrams for sittings were of daily occurrence. I will relate one of many instances related by this friend.

A gentleman came and desired a sitting and was admitted to the seance room by Mr. Simmons. He came out in tears. He related to Mr. Simmons what he had received and the reason of his coming. He had previously lost a dear wife by death. He had a beautiful young daughter whom he had turned from his home because she had gone astray. He was wealthy and aristocratic and was grief-stricken with wounded pride and the thought of the conduct of his daughter.

Between clean slates came this message:

"Dear (calling him by name). Take our child (name given) to your heart and home and all will be well.

"Your loving wife, (name given)."

Money flowed in freely. Checks came to him for large sums beside the regular fee charged for his sittings. A railroad man sent him a check for $500 during his stay, in gratitude for a message received.

This constant tax upon his nervous system drained him of vitality. Paralysis slowly crept over his nervous system and his brain became affected. He did not become insane as papers have stated, but senile. He resorted to stimulants to tone up his system, with the usual results. Like thousands of others he lost whatever he had acquired by gift and his profession. Poets, sages and even ministers of the gospel have gone down in like manner.

During his days of health and prosperity he had continually helped his relatives with his means. Mr. Simmons told of his profuse generosity to the poor and needy and none applied to him for help in vain.

On his last visit to Johnson Creek he was but a wreck of his former self. He returned again to Michigan where he spent the last few years of his life in a free sanitarium, cared for by friends and the National Association of Spiritualists.

Bigotry and zeal of so called religion has set thousands of pens in motion to blacken his character and undermine his work. But the truth of immortality and of the intercommunion of the two worlds which he so amply helped to demonstrate cannot be written down by prejudice nor obliterated by calumny.

What Our English Brothers Are Talking About.

THE SPIRITUAL BLIGHT OF INDIA.

Apart From the Evil Motive, We Have in Christendom, in the Story of the Crucifixion, the Counterpart of This Doctrine of the Piling Up of Available Merit by Enduring of Suffering—As Set Forth in Light, London, England.

Mr. John Campbell Oman's absorbing and important work on "The Mystics, Ascetics, and Saints of India" (London: T. Fisher Unwin) gets right under the confused medley covered by his title, and by his sub-title, "A Study of Sadhuism, with an Account of the Yogis, Sanyasis, Bairagis, and Other Strange Hindu Sectarians." The antiquity of this phase of Indian life is the first noticeable fact. The word "Sadhu" covers a vast deal of the ground. The Sadhu is the ascetic and perhaps the saint whose amazing proceedings mainly occupy the pages of this profoundly interesting work. He is "no recent importation, no modern excrescence, but has flourished in India, a veritable indigenous growth, from a time which dates many centuries before the advent of Christ, or even the preaching of Buddha of the eightfold path leading to enlightenment and deliverance."

Sadhuism is the expression of moods and experiences which inevitably tended to produce a morbid, ascetic and self-degrading state of mind. "Probably the earliest promptings towards ascetic practices came from a desire of self-humiliation before the Unseen Powers, in order to propitiate them"; and, naturally enough, "in times of great national troubles, when the protecting gods seem to have turned away in wrath, ascetic practices become more common, widespread, and intense, till sometimes whole communities seem to be smitten by a mania for self-abasement, self-imposed hardships, and severe austerities."

Such turning away of the gods seemed frequent in the old days, and even in later times, India, for many centuries, has been the prey of despoilers. Individualism has been crushed, and the tedium of existence has pressed upon weary souls, tired out with sorrow, want and misery.

It was this, probably, working upon a peculiar temperament "whose most striking characteristics are imaginativeness, emotionalism, mysticism, credulity, religious fervor and impressionability, all in a very exaggerated degree," that led on to the root doctrine of Indian asceticism and to the spread and influence of Sadhuism. This "root doctrine" is that the body is the cause of all evil; and that spirit is intrinsically good. Hence, the main business of the man who would attain to sanctity is to insult, degrade, contradict and utterly triumph over the body. The Sadhu is one who devotes himself to this, who invents strange, disgusting and horrible ways of outraging his body, and who, in consequence, poses as a winner of merit, or of power for the spirit.

Mr. Oman cites six reasons which prompt to these ascetic practices:

1. A desire, which is intensified by all personal or national troubles, to propitiate the Unseen Powers.

2. A longing on the part of the intensely religious to follow in the footsteps of their master, almost invariably an ascetic.

3. A wish to work out one's own future salvation, or emancipation, by conquering the evil inherent in human nature, i. e., the flesh.

4. A yearning to prepare one's self by purification of mind and body for entering into present communion with the Divine Being.

5. Despair arising from disillusionment and from defeat in the battle of life.

And lastly, mere vanity, stimulated by the admiration which the multitude bestow upon the ascetic.

To tell the truth, the Sadhus, in their efforts to compete with one another, and to invent strange and horrible self-degradations and mutilations, have become a kind of showman-craft, or wandering mendicants to the number of hundreds of thousands. "Their calendar of fairs and festivals is comprehensive and accurate. They know well how to time their devious wanderings so as to make them fit in with the festal events of each locality within their annual round of pilgrimages to sacred places where, on all important occasions, they congregate in hosts."

Referring in a more general way to the Hindu practitioners of bodily degradation, the fact comes out strongly that a vast amount of it is entirely unconnected with ethics—that, in fact, the effort to lay up merit by bodily misery has or had largely for its object the winning of power over occult forces—and, as often as not for sinister purposes.

"According to Hindu theory," said Sir Monier Williams, "the performance of penances was like making deposits in the bank of heaven. By degrees an enormous credit was accumulated which enabled the depositor to draw to the amount of his savings, without fear of his drafts being refused payment. The power gained in this way by weak mortals was so enormous that gods as well as men were equally at the mercy of these all but omnipotent ascetics, and it is remarkable that even the gods are described as engaging in penances and austerities, in order, it may be presumed, not to be outdone by human beings." Wonderful stories are told by Hindu sages and in Hindu scriptures of men who entered upon the ascetic's path and endured most awful tortures on purpose to pile up spiritual power in order to overpower and destroy their enemies.

Apart from the evil motive, Mr. Oman points out that we have in Christendom (in the story of the crucifixion) the counterpart of this doctrine of the piling up of available merit by the enduring of suffering. He says: "If the Hindu were to point out that a kindred idea seems to be at the root of the story of the Crucifixion, as well as of the motive assigned for that astounding voluntary humiliation on the part of the Deity, it would be impossible for the unbiased seeker after truth to deny the validity of the contention, since in the 'cross and passion' of the Redemption we distinctly find the notion of the efficacy of voluntary hardships, poverty, physical suffering and death, for the attainment of a great object otherwise unachievable even by the Deity himself."

SPIRIT CONTRADICTIONS.

The Editor of Harbinger of Light, Australia, Makes Some Pertinent Reflections in Regard to the Same, Which Will Prove of Interest to All Spiritualists.

Many Spiritualists, and especially those who are not conversant with the difficulties that pertain to the transmission of matters of fact from the spirit world to the mortal plane, are terribly disconcerted at the receipt of conflicting or contradictory communications, and apt to imagine that where this occurs in connection with any prominent person, that it will be a serious check to the advancement of Spiritualism. We are not of that sort; large experience has convinced us that in the present state of human and spiritual development such conflict and contradictions are inevitable, and can only be avoided by a careful study of the philosophy of spiritual intercourse and the practice of more philosophical methods. In private circles they are of little consequence; if the individuals persist in their investigation rationally, experience will enable them to avoid the difficulty by realizing the cause, but where teachings having an important bearing upon the nature of the future life—professedly from exalted intelligences and received through a medium of culture and undoubted integrity, which have been published and read with faith by thousands of people—appear to be flatly contradicted by the translated spirit of the same medium, it is to be expected that many who have not the experience to enable them to discern the weakness of the source of the contradiction, will have their faith shaken in the reliability of the teachings referred to, viz., "Spirit Teachings" through the mediumship of the late Wm. Stainton Moses, M. A. (Oxon). The number of people in Australia who read the reports of the British Society for Psychical Research, where the contradictions first appear, are few, and the price of the particular one we refer to was prohibitive of a large circulation anywhere; but a translation of M. Sage's review of "Mrs. Piper and the Society for Psychical Research," recently published, which contains a printed repetition of the matter, and further reference to it in Mr. Charles Dawbarn's "After Death—What" published in our last issue, bring it under the notice of a large number of people and prompts us to endeavor to throw some light on the subject and ease the minds of some, at least, whose "hearts are troubled" over the matter; we judge from remarks that have been made to us that these are not a few. The case is as follows:

In Dr. Hodgson's lengthy report of his investigation of Mrs. Piper's mediumship, published in the Journal of the English Psychical Research Society some years since, there occurs an account of a sitting given to Professor Newbold where that gentleman, in the course of his questions to the communicating intelligence, asks: "Does the soul carry with it into its new life all its passions and animal appetites?" To which George Pelham (a name that the controlling spirit has adopted but which does not belong to him) replies: "Oh, no, indeed; not at all. Why, my good friend and scholar, you would have this world of ours a decidedly material one if it were so." On which Professor Newbold remarks that the writings of Stainton Moses claimed that the soul carries with it all its passions and appetites, and was very slowly purified of them.

George Pelham rejoins: "It is all untrue." Professor Newbold adds, "and that the souls of the bad hover over the earth goading sinners to destruction." George Pelham persists in his denial, says he claims to understand about this: "Sinners are sinners only in one life. An argument takes place about this and George is asked to look up Stainton Moses and beg him to come and communicate. This he is supposed to have accomplished. The Professor thereupon interrogates the newcomer thus: "You taught that evil spirits tempt sinners to their destruction?" To which the spirit replies: "I have found out differently since I came over here. This particular statement given me by my friends as their medium when in the body is not true." Professor N.—"Your second statement was that the soul carries its passions and appetites with it." W. S. M.—"Material passions. Untrue. It is not so. I believed that we had every desire after reaching this life that we had in the body, but I find that we leave all such behind. In other words, evil thoughts die with the body."

In the first place it will be observed that Stainton Moses is charged with teaching what George Pelham declares to be untrue, but as a matter of fact "Imperator," the most exalted spirit who communicated with him was the teacher, and his teachings as a whole cannot fail to impress any unbiased reader as emanating from a refined and highly cultured mind. Critics and reviewers have invariably admitted their high tone. Moreover, they are in accord with the communications received and accepted by the most advanced mediums and seers. On the other hand we have George Pelham, who has only left this world a year or two, professing to know and dogmatically affirming that the teachings are erroneous, and, at the suggestion of the Professor, hunting up Stainton Moses and bringing him to Mrs. Piper to recant, and confirm his (Pelham's) views. We doubt very much whether it was Stainton Moses' spirit who responded; Pelham was a stranger to him in the body, and would not be likely to get him at call in the spirit world; but even if it were, Mrs. Piper was not a fit instrument for him to communicate through. Up to this time through the voluminous records of her mediumship, we fail to find anything of an exalted or religious nature; she was merely a machine for tests and common places, with no evidences of soul inspiration, and a considerable amount of unreliable and contradictory matter had been passed through her by her leading control.

At a later period, when all her old influences had been dismissed and she had been taken under the control of "Imperator" and his assistants, the whole character of what came through her was changed and the idiosyncrasies of the higher intelligences were distinctly manifest. Had Stainton Moses been brought into Mrs. Piper's sphere at the period first referred to, he would have veritably found himself in what Mr. Dawbarn calls "fogland," and, like a hypnotised subject, mechanically responded to [illegible] positive

CURIOSITIES OF COINCIDENCE.

Evidences of Spirit Power and Influence—Remarkable Escape From Being Murdered—Impressions, Dreams, Telepathy—Her Spirit Husband and Son Come to Her—As Set Forth in Light, London, England.

The discussion in the "Daily Graphic" on "Curiosities of Coincidence," to which we alluded in Light of September 16, on p. 440, has elicited a number of striking letters from well-known persons.

The Rev. S. Baring-Gould tells how he once greatly desired to consult his sister, who was traveling in Wales, so that he did not know her address. Next day but one, in the morning, he received a letter from her, saying that his form had come to her bedside in the night and asked her to write to him, as he had something very particular to consult her about.

Mr. F. C. Selous narrates a remarkable escape from being murdered by natives in Africa. Visiting a family of which one of the members was mediumistic, he was induced to try automatic writing, and without his own volition a message was repeatedly written warning him to go out of the country, or he would be murdered by the natives. The message purported to be from a friend of his own, who was a brother of the medium, and who had suffered that fate not long before. Mr. Selous could not well give up his journey, but some six months afterwards he was repeatedly attacked, and, he says, "for days I lived in the very shadow of violent death, and my escape was little less than miraculous. The warning had, indeed, very nearly proved true."

A number of the cases related are of exact impressions, whether in dreams or otherwise, which were afterwards verified; cases are also given in which the same peculiar chain of circumstances was repeated at a year's interval. The fact of a fancied recognition being followed by a meeting with the actual person thought of is referred to as of common occurrence, while in some instances, when an unexpected meeting of former friends has taken place one of them has seen the "double" or form of the other, this being usually distinguished from a real person by the fact that it takes no notice of anyone and does not respond to a salutation. (This trait in "Phantasms of the Living" is well illustrated in Mr. Span's article on p. 283 of Light.)

Dr. John Watson ("Ian Maclaren") gives four instances in which he received strong impressions to preach certain sermons or to go to certain places; all of them were amply justified by the results, and in the one case in which he did not yield to the impulse he found that he had "missed a gracious opportunity and failed to render a timely service." He concludes with this fine expression of belief:

"My conviction is that a spiritual power guides every man in his life; that this power acts upon his will through his soul, by which I mean the spiritual part of him; that through callousness and obstinacy we are insensible at times to this power, or even contend against it; and that if our souls were finer instruments to record spiritual impressions we should never miss the Will of God, or fail in the work God has committed to our hands."

Sarah Grand, writing in the issue of the 18th inst., thinks that the theory "that thoughts are indestructible things, that thought is creative, and that by thought transference there is continually going on between human beings a system of communication which is at present for the most part involuntary, but which must in time, when the laws which govern it have been discovered, come under control," opens up "a more emphatic and astonishing reason for a complete revolution in our habits of mind" than anything else "in this age of scientific discovery and psychical research."

Although she never studied telepathy some of her experiences seem to prove that there is a means of communication between mind and mind. For instance, when writing to a neighbor, whom she got rid of his earthly theological bias. The idea that man's nature is miraculously changed and purged of all evil by the process of transition will not bear the light of reason; he must work out his salvation, not in fear and trembling, but with courage, repentance and deeds of atonement. Dr. Peebles' recent volume on "Obsession" gives overwhelming evidence of the truth of "Imperator's" teachings. Swedenborg and Bacon in their communications to Judge Edmonds speak of "the adversaries;" and the original teachings in Australia received over forty years since, the MS. of which is in our possession, caution us against them; indeed, few investigators have been exempt from their interference, but a careful study of the subject in all its aspects before commencing a practical investigation will enable the investigators to ward off any serious interference on the part of mischievous spirits, and harmonious conditions combined with high aspirations will open a path through "fogland" to the plane of truth, and affirms that "some unknown influence caused a picture of that bridge to appear in my mind, and to project a situation of immediate danger while my father was some three or four miles distant from the scene."

The Ven. Archdeacon Colley, in his sermon at Stockton Parish Church, on Sunday evening, the 17th inst., is reported in the "Leamington Chronicle" of the 19th to have referred to the recent death of two of his parishioners, who, he said, had no fear of death before passing over. The first was a Mrs. Berry, a widow, who had no knowledge of Spiritualism, but shortly before her death she assured the Archdeacon that her husband "often came to her bedside, as also did her son Oliver George." Mrs. Berry in a sense rebuked him "for speaking of her husband as dead, when, to her quickened perception, he was then at her bedside." In the other case, Mrs. Noon, before she departed, felt the actual touch of an invisible hand. She was suffering from a dislocated limb, and was startled at first when the hand was laid upon it to assuage the pain, but she clairaudiently heard her husband (who had been on the other side for two years and a half, and who used to rub her to relieve her sufferings from rheumatism) say that he could do "her more good than the doctors could do." The Archdeacon's whole sermon was an outspoken plea for belief in spirit companionship and had never met, she was thinking how strange it was that she did not even know him by sight. While she was writing she received a letter or a pamphlet about vegetarianism, and finished her letter with that subject in her mind. Her correspondent in his reply remarked, incidentally, "in the very words in which the same thought had shaped itself" in her mind while she was writing to him, on the strangeness of their never having met, and he touched on vegetarianism, a subject they had never before discussed.

The Rev. Forbes Phillips, Vicar of Gorleston, says:

"A few days ago a fishing firm asked me to communicate to a mother in my parish the sad fact that her son had been lost at sea. As soon as I entered the cottage she cried out, "I know! I know! Bertie is drowned!" Already the poor dear had tasted to the dregs the bitterness of the cup that I was supposed to be bringing. Yet not a word of his death had reached her. The glib explanation would be, something in voice and manner gave her the suspicion. Not at all. My manner possibly would have given the secret away. But I found her with the blinds down, in the depths of her despair."

When fourteen years of age the Rev. F. Phillips had a dream in which he saw his father, who was in the Revenue, in danger of falling through a gap in the Hook Bridge about two miles from Goole. Awakening, and finding that his father was absent from home, he dressed and rang up the junior officer and induced him to accompany him to the bridge, where, he says:

"We heard steps coming in our direction and I ran forward, and there was before me the whole picture of my dream. A cloud of steam was coming up through a wide opening in the bridge, and my father was within twenty feet of it, coming to his doom, with his swinging, quick stride that I knew so well.

"I had never been on the bridge before. No one was allowed to cross save the officials of the company and the officers of Customs, who did so at their own risk. There was never a doubt in my father's mind that my appearance saved him from death, as it was impossible to see the opening because of the fog and the steam; and never expecting part of the bridge to be taken up, he would have continued walking on throughout the length of the bridge."

SPIRIT RETURN.

It Is Kaleidoscopic in Character, and Common to all Humanity, Coming in a Great Variety of Ways and Circumstances—A Curious Case at Ravenna, Ohio, as Set Forth by the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Ghost stories are old and probably no town is without some story of a "mysterious spirit," but Ravenna has one that will cause all the old timers to sit up and take notice.

Sidney Veon has been living in a small house about two miles southeast of Ravenna, next door to the country home of W. J. Hayes, the Cleveland banker. Mr. Veon's home has been broken up by a ghost. He lived there for several months but the ghost only made its appearance a short time ago. The ghost appears in the form of an old man walking with a cane and comes each night between the hours of 9 and 12, and Mr. Veon says that strange things have happened right in midday.

This strange thing, whatever it is, has been kept up until Mrs. Veon was frightened frantic, and carried from the house in an unconscious condition a few nights ago. They are selling off their household goods and will not live there any more.

The ghost slams the doors and windows, plays the piano, moves the furniture about and does any number of those things that seem impossible. At noon when the family was seated at the dinner table the piano began playing and as their little boy was not in sight Mrs. Veon called to him to get away from the piano. The boy began to laugh, and then Mr. and Mrs. Veon went into the room. The instrument had been playing "Blue Bell," and as they entered the cover went down with a smash.

Mr. Veon says that the windows will fly up and the doors come open and close again from some mysterious cause. A few nights ago one of the windows opened and the outline of the old man and his cane stood there. Mr. Veon made a grab at it, only to see it vanish and hear one of the most horrible laughs imaginable. Quite often this laugh is heard about the house when there are no visions. Mr. Veon's hat was hanging on a nail in the wall a few nights ago and as he sat there looking at it, the hat began to spin, then rose off the nail, floated about the room and finally lighted at his feet.

The bed in which Mrs. Veon's sister was sleeping recently was turned completely around during the night and when she awoke in the morning the head of the bed was placed tight against the window.

Mr. Veon says that he saw the "old man" coming up to the door recently and he thought he would chase it. Mr. Veon started after the ghost and ran it twice around the house and then just as he thought he was going to get hold of it, it vanished again with that same horrible laugh.

The friends of Mr. Veon have been making considerable sport over what he has been telling them about ghosts but he always stoutly maintains his sincerity and after his wife was carried from the place unconscious, a party of neighbors went there to see the ghost, and they got scared and left before morning.

BRIGHT POINTS IN MOTION.

They Are Composed of Animalcules.

In The Progressive Thinker, T. F. Lee gives an experience under the head of "Bright Points in Motion," which consists of swarms of animalcules in space. The author wishes to ask who has had a similar power of sight? I have had three such experiences and under the same conditions as T. F. Lee's. These bright points traveled in all directions, right and left, up and down, toward me and from me, in curves, circles and parabolas, then skipping off in a straight line. I remembered having read "The Discovered Country," by Petersilea, in which they are described as holding the male and female principle of life, and those of certain species are inhaled by men and go from their lungs to the blood. I went away thinking how beautiful is the process of nature.

W. A. MUELLER.

THE HUMAN WILL.

It Is Amenable to Reason, and Should Be Governed Thereby.

So much is written and talked, at the present time, about the human will and its accomplishments. It is said to be the principal motor in all activities.

Let us see. What is it that supplies the will for its action? It is wholly dependent upon the sense activities. The senses can only furnish such material as the acquired mental unfoldments permit, then what is so produced is to be first submitted to reason to pass judgment upon. The will is then expected to work in harmony with that judgment. We see thus, that the will is not only subordinate to reason, but its strength for achievement depends upon the quality of mental activities.

When a man or woman sees but one side of a question or problem, instead of all sides, the will is as a rule wrongly exerted and works damage instead of blessings.

The will itself is a blind force, so to say, that needs to be governed by reason and guided by wisdom for good results. True, will-power, or what passes for that, even wrongly exerted, may, and often does accomplish craved results, but such results give pain and sorrow in the end.

As we behold such mental output of mortal desires and thought, both voiced and silent, and see the same supplemented by strong willing to thus secure for themselves some worldly gain, etc., we feel exceedingly sorry for them, seeing that they thus overstep the limits of right and abide not in truth, and are then in constant need to tell untruths to hide their motives and selfish efforts.

This is the chief cause of so many detrimental fluctuations which make nearly all the troubles mortals experience beside retarding soul growth, thus progression.

There are too many mortals, even in this enlightened age, who prey upon their fellow-travelers and work them harm in subtle ways, wearing masks of assumed kindness and even friendship to further their wicked ends. It was always thus. Paul of old realized it even among those whom he taught, and counted as friends. In Galations, he cries out, "O foolish Galations, who hath bewitched you that ye should not obey the truth?" He saw in spirit that not obeying the truth or being truthful, caused these detrimental vibratory fluctuations, and that their active vibratory ratios were on the lower levels, therefore, even when they wished to entertain higher thought and meditation, the opposite lower force currents would seek ingress to their minds and would not be put aside, for the reason that they had been previously invited by selfish desires and thoughts.

Now these differences in vibratory ratios are what fix gulfs in life's pursuits, and these are not passed over easily when once constructed.

You see the thoughts of mortals on the lower strata of life's expression are one-sided, imperfect, thus the exercise of their will power cannot result in blessings, and O, such a checkered life record these would-be-good, yet really wicked people make, and what painful after experiences when Earth-life is ended.

It is each one's duty in accordance with his own best interest to adhere strictly to the rules of right, no matter what betides him. Thus mental firmness and true character is acquired which can command and sunside ill force and remove all barriers in life's true progress, because thinking and acting nobly strengthens the will in the true sense so it can have the full support of the Omnific Will in all worthy efforts, as well as the defence of immutable and general laws.

MRS. M. KLEIN.

Van Wert, Ohio.

Roosevelt Versus Cleveland.

Ex-President Cleveland's article against woman suffrage, in the Ladies' Home Journal, following close upon his article against women's clubs, calls attention afresh to the great difference between him and President Roosevelt. The two are opposite types in many respects; and nowhere is the contrast between the older and the younger man more marked than in their views on the woman question.

Both of them believe in the great usefulness and value of woman's work in the home and the family. That is a point upon which we all agree. But Mr. Cleveland seems to think that woman's sphere is the home and nothing else. He solemnly assures us that if a woman joins even a single club, her home and her character will be in danger; while if women could vote, disaster would overtake both them and their country.

Mr. Roosevelt, on the other hand, was the first governor of New York to recommend woman suffrage in his message to the Legislature. Instead of urging women to limit their interests exclusively to the home, Mr. Roosevelt in his public addresses has again and again urged upon them the importance of interesting themselves also in the welfare of the world outside. In speaking to the New York State Assembly of Mothers, he said: "A woman, to be a true mother, must be more than a cross between the head nurse and the house-keeper. She must have an interest in outside things to keep her own self-respect. No family can become all that it should be if the mother does not keep in touch sufficiently with outside interests and what is going on in the world." In his recent address to the National Congress of Mothers, after speaking of the great value of the work done by the mass of men and women for their own families, he added: "Of course there are exceptional men and exceptional women who can lead and ought to lead great careers of outside usefulness in addition to—not as substitutes for—their home work."

In general, it may be said that Mr. Cleveland's attitude of mind in regard to the woman question is archaic and looks toward the past, while Mr. Roosevelt's is modern and faces toward the future.

HOW FAR.

How far are heaven and hell apart?
No farther than from heart to heart;
Some souls taste both ere death.
How far is spirit life away?
The thickness of this veil of clay,
The journey of a breath.

C. L. H.

No one will ever find a fact in the universe that will harm the truth, although science may make discoveries that will discredit the dogmas of the church.—Washburn.

Which Is It? A Crime or a Blunder?

"Not only so. How is it possible for a woman in a department store or other public institution to meet the demands of fashionable society as to dress, and meet other necessary expenses on ten cents a day? And yet the parvenus of society who wither a sensitive girl with a glance of scorn if her garments show evidences of a month's wear, are the very first to complain of high wages, to denounce any effort to better the condition of the dependent classes, and who hoot at the possibility of merchandise being made of virtue in order to subsist and meet the false demands of a false and unholy economic system."

So says Mr. Dryden. We desire to say that our space is too limited to introduce in our paper a discussion of Socialism, finance, or the labor question. Send such articles to the secular press in the future.

"I quite agree with Sister Payne that our Government is not to blame for any individual's mistake or misdoing; but how many of us are individually to blame for our Government's mistakes and blunders that are worse than crimes?"

No 828 of The Progressive Thinker was so well filled with good things that in observing my usual custom of selecting scrap-book clippings, almost one-half of the paper was appropriated. The poetical effusions were all good; the editorials meaty; the discussions of the relationships existing between Spiritualism and Theosophy were especially interesting to me, because for some time past I have been carefully investigating along that line and am both surprised and delighted to find so many points of agreement, notwithstanding the efforts of certain representatives of each to establish antagonisms between the two.

But that which interested and pleased me most of all was the masterly manner in which Laura B. Payne dealt with some of the defects in the world's systems of government generally, and with the management of affairs in our own vineyard particularly. Talleyrand, referring to a certain policy of Napoleon Bonaparte said of it: "It was worse than a crime, it was a blunder." In like manner, a careful consideration of some of the defects in our industrial, educational and social systems to which she refers, leads to the inquiry which heads this article, were they merely crimes, or something worse?

There are two principles of government which constitute the key-note and give assurance of the continued greatness of our nation, and they are, first, in a Republic, such as ours claims to be, the whole people are the government. Second, all just government derives its power from the consent of the governed. The very existence of the defects referred to is proof that these fundamental principles are being disregarded. The rising tide of uncertainty, dissatisfaction and unrest indicates clearly that the affairs of government are neither being conducted by, nor with the consent of the whole people. And the existence of these things further indicates that each passing day increases in the minds of the people the conviction that the social and political defects, or blunders of which they complain, are not only unjust, onerous and oppressive, but they are inexcusable and unnecessary, because there are other and better conditions at hand ready to be ushered in.

The indictment which the writer of the article referred to frames against our industrial and educational systems is severe, but amply supported by evidence. The school laws of many of the states are crammed with compulsory attendance and truancy provisions which possess about as much vital force and effect as a mummy from Thebes; because the god of the empty stomach is superior to all such enactments, and his harsh edicts of hunger and nakedness cause tens of thousands of parents and children to quietly evade or openly violate them with impunity.

Why with impunity? Because the self-interest of the employer and employe, and the profits hoped for by the law-making and law-enforcing fraternities, all demand that children should swell the income of the lords and masters, rather than cumber their own minds with "book larnin.'" An industrial system that brings father and son in sharp competition for the same job of work, and drives mother and four-year-old babes to the sweat shops and cigar factories in order to obtain a bare family subsistence, is in direct antagonism to our educational or any other system that has a tendency to lessen the supply of cheap labor.

The wages paid female toilers in New York and Chicago, as stated in the article referred to, is indicative of the earnings of millions of toilers in the United States to-day. Through the capitalistic press the reading public is promptly informed of every advance of wages, however slight, but never informed of the reductions; and the averages of yearly earnings paraded by the various Reporting Agencies are invariably based upon official salaries and wages of skilled labor; not upon the pitiful earnings of the unskilled multitude.

Joseph Cook, the Boston clergyman, in one of his celebrated Monday Lectures, defines starvation wages as being "any sum less than double the cost of un-cooked food." The logic upon which this proposition is based is that clothing, house-rent, doctors' bills and other necessary and unavoidable expenses must of necessity equal the cost of un-cooked food. Accepting the amount stated by Miss Auten (76.74) as the average earnings of shop girls, seamstresses, etc., and applying the above rule, we have $38.37 with which to supply uncooked food for 365 days, or 10 cents per day, or 3 1-3 per meal. How much food for a toiler's meal can be bought on any market for 3 1-3 cents? Under the existing Meat Trust prices, how far would that sum go toward procuring a shin-bone for soup?

Not only so. How is it possible for a woman in a department store or other public institution to meet the demands of fashionable society as to dress, and meet other necessary expenses on ten cents a day? And yet the parvenus of society who wither a sensitive girl with a glance of scorn if her garments show evidences of a month's wear, are the very first to complain of high wages, to denounce any effort to better the condition of the dependent classes, and who hoot at the possibility of merchandise being made of virtue in order to subsist and meet the false demands of a false and unholy economic system.

That such sacrifices are made upon the altar of commercial greed, is unfortunately too true, and I almost feel tempted to congratulate those who through ignorance deny that such is the case, for "where ignorance is bliss, 'twere folly to be wise."

Because of the ever-widening field of occupations in which young women are engaging, not only have the old men been crowded out, but the young men find themselves facing the alternative of accepting the wage scale forced upon girls and children, or else stepping down and out. The increased cost of living and the uncertainties of obtaining steady remunerative employment, deter multitudes of young men from marrying, claiming that their incomes are not sufficient to meet their own and increasing demands of wife and children. Consequently we have for the past four decades winessed an alarming increase in celibacy; until, based upon the census of 1900, it is safe to say that 65 per cent of the toilers of America are unmarried. The moral and spiritual results of such a condition are obvious.

Angels and ministers of grace shield us from the social hell that yawns in our pathway not very many years ahead.

Unmarried labor is migratory labor. Like the newly-fledged quail, the bachelor toiler carries his home on his back and tramps the highway in search of better conditions and something to eat. With none but himself to support, he can camp close to the line of starvation wages; and casting his lot with the Cheap Johns and other foreign pauper bachelors who are flocking to our shores by increasing thousands each year, he comes squarely in competition with the home-loving married laborer and outbids him every time in the auction of capitalistic greed, where jobs are sold to the lowest bidder. As a result the toiling father must either accept the wages of the foreign pauper bachelor and bind wife and children to the tread-mill of toil in order to obtain family subsistence, or else join the tramp brigade while the family share with the dogs the crumbs that fall from Dives' table, called charity.

Mrs. Payne further informs us that there are now a "million and a half unemployed, a gigantic army of the disinherited for whom there is no job of any kind." According to the other estimates claiming to be reliable, she could add another half million without doing violence to the truth. But even this army, vast and disgraceful to our American civilization as it is, is to be increased five fold in the next two years. John D. Rockefeller, the business deity of the world to-day, predicts that the worst financial panic ever known is to be inaugurated in 1907, and that from seven to ten million toilers will be thrown out of employment in addition to those already out. And every intelligent observer of the signs of the times knows that the chances in favor of his prophecy coming true, are almost ninety-seven and one-half out of a hundred. His prediction is based upon the some old cause assigned for all financial panics by legislative grafters, frenzied financiers and business thieves.

"Over-production," which being interpreted means: the many producers have nothing wherewith to buy back for their own use the products which they made and gave to the few. The great American idol, high protective tariff, has wrought out its legitimate results. It has not only protected home labor by excluding foreign cheap productions and admitting the foreign pauper laborers, but it has closed and hermetically sealed the "Open Door" to Oriental and European markets which we fondly hoped would furnish an outlet for the increased products of our cheap labor and improved machinery. The ever-increasing current of combination and concentration having swept more than 90 per cent of the nation's wealth into the pockets of 1 per cent of the population, the impoverished millions have nothing with which to relieve the glutted markets. Consequently the business arteries are congested, the productive energies becoming paralyzed, and the industrial machine demands rest and repairs; while almost one-half of the vast population of the Republic will see the bottom of Mark Hanna's full dinner pail.

The world's history fails to present a parallel to the magnificent display of wisdom and benevolence contained in Mr. Rockefeller's plan to relieve the distress of the unemployed; which is that government shall construct wagon roads and auto boulevards and Appian Ways from Ocean to Ocean and from the lakes to Florida so as to furnish this disinherited multitude a chance to earn bread! When we reflect that Mr. Rockefeller has more ready cash on hand than the United States government has, that he has done more than any and all the other agencies at work to turn adrift this mighty army of tramps (this suggestion seems to be equivalent to saying to the public, "Here, I have squeezed the lemon dry, now you can take care of the rind."

But when we consider the financial side of the proposition, the benefits to the public and the disinterested unselfishness of the great god of the business world—stand forth in their colossal majesty. Let us hope that the oily prophet's lowest estimate will be realized and only seven million Weary Willies be employed by government.

Doubtless a Christian government like our own would not think of paying less than $1.50 per day, nor demanding more than 300 days' labor per year. This would necessitate an outlay of only $3,150,000,000 for labor alone, aside from picks, shovels, scrapers, and other tools and implements.

But such a gigantic process of industrial recuperation and cultivation of public charity could not be consummated in one year. The history of all past financial crises informs us that the debris, the human wrecks, the flotsam and jetsam left upon the shores of a stupendous business depression such as the coming one is likely to be, cannot be gathered up in one year. The chances are that the carnival will last long enough to enable government to construct at least a bicycle path to every house in the land and create a bonded indebtedness of six or eight billions of dollars, so as to enable the frenzied financiers to locate a national bank at every cross roads. The proposed measure is so thoroughly in keeping with the broad business methods of the oil king, and his Wall street associates that we need not be surprised to see it done.

I quite agree with Sister Payne that our government is not to blame for any individual's mistake or misdoing; but how many of us are individually to blame for our government's mistakes and blunders that are worse than crimes?

I feel almost ashamed to write in this fault-finding, carping manner, because in the first place I helped to establish conditions as they now exist, and am doing but very little to better them; and in the second place, the people want just such a government and such conditions as now exist, because the majority rules, and the majority votes for their continuance at each election.

When we read of the colossal legislative grafters, and land frauds, and insurance misappropriations, and the legion of wholesale peculations, and bribery and theft in every branch of business, we can but ask "What in heaven's name is the condition of public conscience and private integrity? Do they not take their character and coloring from the individual factors comprising the public? Can we expect the stream to rise above its fountain head?"

Every item suggested by Mrs. Payne in answer to her question, "What is the remedy?" is pertinent and essential in effecting the remedy. But how are any of them to be brought into active exercise until the individual conscience is quickened, and the public sense of right and justice aroused. The first and most essential factor in building the co-operative commonwealth, is direct legislation; the initiative and referendum; by which alone can the management of affairs be taken out of the hands of scurvy lawyers, pot-house politicians, corrupt legislators, truculent judges and a venal press, and placed back in the hands of the whole people where they rightfully belong.

These essential measures cannot be obtained until constitutional amendments are grafted upon the national and nearly all the state constitutions.

These amendments must originate in the United States Senate, and in the state legislatures; and with all these bodies owned and controlled by capitalistic machine politicians, it seems to me that the first and most essential duty of all who really desire better conditions, is to support at the ballot-box only such legislative candidates as will give unqualified assurance of a willingness to submit such amendments to popular vote. I feel confident that a majority of the people are ready and anxious to adopt such measures.

Yours for a People's Government,
San Diego, Cal. J. L. DRYDEN.

STRAY THOUGHTS

On Various Themes, From a Worker.

I am spending the months of September and October amid the beautiful hills and vales of the old Empire State. My only sister in the flesh, and her three children with their families, have each fine stock farms, with commodious houses, barns, etc., all within about five miles of DeRuyter, my native town, the nearest railroad station. Last spring my sister and husband leased their farm and purchased a home in Lincklaen Center, a little settlement which contains as its only business enterprises a postoffice and two churches, Adventist and Seventh-Day Baptist.

Last Sabbath (Saturday) I accompanied my sister to the meeting of the former with whom she is affiliated. The minister preached from the text, "The heart of man is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." He prefaced his remarks by explaining that in the past people supposed that thoughts, feelings and impulses proceeded from the heart, etc.

I wondered if anyone in the audience queried if that was the word of God as he called it, didn't know better?

After the meeting there were seven baptized in the brook that runs through the place. With one exception they were little boys and girls and in less than two hours they were clubbing apple trees across the way and pocketing the fruit. Verily "The ways of the Lord are mysterious and past finding out."

The preacher doubtless was sincere and devoted, and I could in my mind's eye see him brought in contact with some manifestations that convinced him of the communion between the earthly and decarnate man, simply transferring his blind allegiance to God and Jesus to the "dear spirits" and accepting every communication as authority without reference to the intellectual or moral standard of the communicant. From such sources we get our over-credulous Spiritualists, those who believe in churches, pastors, ordinations, christenings and the whole retinue of ceremonials belonging to ecclesiasticism. So long as men have not outgrown a belief in rulership, authority, they will bow down in servile subjection to popes, bibles, laws or spirits, it matters little which.

When the child condition in development is superseded by that of manhood, all authority will cease. Men will be ruled alone by their highest sense of truth and right and acknowledge no one as master, having become self-masterful. Then all worship will cease with its flummeries and ceremonials.

All will come to know that every thought and act will bring forth its natural fruitage, that cause and sequence is a law of nature, and that there is a law of nature, and that there are no means of escape from the results of action. Thus knowing, every one will feel he cannot afford to do a wrong to others or himself, either physically intellectually or morally.

I have found only one Spiritualist who knew me through The Progressive Thinker which she has taken for years and highly appreciates. Mrs. Beard is now 87 years old; has been a healing medium in the past and is credited with much good work in that direction.

My sister was telling me of a talk she had with a supposedly orthodox man who believed that spirits entered the next life in the same state as they left this, likening life (as I often do) to a graded school, and believing in progression after death. She told him that was the belief of Spiritualists which he denied knowledge of. The world moves on.

THE NEW THOUGHT IDEA.

"Judged From a Spiritualistic and Socialistic Standpoint.

To the Editor:—In your issue of September 9, David A. Leisk of this city, under the caption, "Judged From a Spiritualistic Standpoint," in a half-page article, presents a good argument in favor of the so-called "New Thought Idea," that every man must, if he would advance, develop his own innate powers. He says:

"The power to make mankind new creatures, springs from within, drawn from that innermost relation of life which is ceaseless and untiring in its energy making all things new."

With all that Mr. Leisk says in the article along that line, I agree; but to some other assertions I cannot give my assent. Alluding to the capital-labor problem he says:

"Social reformers, particularly of the political class, desire to legislate the people into peace and plenty through the power of a righteous and equitable government. Socialists, like all other classes of extremists, are one-sided and tenacious to a fault of that particular side of the question which they have espoused. * * * Individual man must first be reformed, and the social and political questions will find true solution through reformation. It isn't so much the environments that make the man as it is man who creates and makes the environments."

Now, Mr. Editor, I have no desire to provoke a debate with my friend Leisk. I wish only to say that no well informed Socialist contends that individuals should not endeavor to develop, to the fullest, their moral and intellectual powers. No prominent teacher of socialism relies wholly on legislation to bring about a juster condition of things. Socialism says let manhood and womanhood be developed individually, by education and instruction, let us, in a collective capacity, by city, state or nation, adopt such rules, or enact such laws as will provide conditions or environments favorable for individual development. The Socialist says, "faith without works is dead." Why think good thoughts and plan kindly plans, if you execute none of them? Is not the "New-thoughter" an "extremist," for contending that environments (laws, customs, etc.,) count for little or nothing?

What would a "New-thoughter" have done in the days of negro slavery, to have told the slave to be good, and to the slave woman to live a virtuous and chaste life if they desired to gain liberty? Did these enslaved negroes make the environments, or did the environments hold three millions of humans in bondage? The Socialist would do what he could to instruct the slave in goodness and chastity, but like Lincoln, he would improve the conditions at the same time by law.

To-day nearly two millions of tender children are being overworked, and practically enslaved, in the mines and mills of this country. The environments created and strenuously maintained by greedy monopoly, are so stunting those children at a tender age, that later in life, they will be totally unfitted to develop their intellectual and spiritual powers. How ridiculous to talk of these little child-slaves developing their innate powers regardless of environments.

The peasants of Russia are the victims of the most cruel environments made by the government. One hundred millions can neither read nor write, and the women are kept in a most degraded condition by the "Holy Church" with government sanction. Now, Socialism says, while you cannot legislate goodness into people, you can legislate as to compel heartless tyrants to get off the backs of their victims, thus creating environments under which they are more likely to develop morally, and mentally than they would in a condition of slavery.

Luther Burbank, the wonderful wizard of the plant world, finds environments—conditions—very important in his marvelous work of developing plants. Air, sunlight, soil, water, and temperature, are as important as the latent germ life principle contained in the seed. In fact, good seed, or the New-thoughter's "innate powers," amount to nothing unless the environments or conditions are provided favorable to the growth of the plant. For centuries small-pox carried off its millions. One city in England abolished the slums, cleaned up the town, changed the environments of the poor, and abolished small-pox in that city.

Socialism appeals to every man's love of justice and equality; proclaims the brotherhood of all men: orders the tyrant to get off the back of his brother; shouts to the "man with the hoe" to look up and assert his manhood—all this to the individual. Turning to society, to all the people collectively, it says: we demand the abolition of child-slavery; we want laws more equitable and just toward the working people; we insist that war shall cease; we favor equal rights for men and women alike; we contend that the honest toiler shall have a large share of the product of his labor; we want the state to provide life insurance; we want the people to own collectively public utilities; we want more public schools and libraries; we insist that all children shall be educated at the public expense—all this to the end that every man, woman and child, shall be placed in conditions, or environments, in which they may have opportunity for the development of their innate powers.

I am rejoiced to see the wave of "New Thought" rising higher and higher. It means much for this and future generations. I agree with much found in its creed. I am however compelled to dissent from that plank which would confine all of its reform work to the task of making spiritual philosophers and savants, one by one, out of eighty millions of people by "thinking, thinking, praying, praying ceaselessly, praying for their own personal unfoldment and spiritual illumination," and at the same time declining to join other progressive people who are not only praying for themselves, but for others, and are also working with their fellows, in a collective capacity, to abolish environments in which poverty, vice, crime and disease do thrive, and to inaugurate other environments which make for intelligence and morality. Yes; there are "extremists" among Socialists, I freely admit, and I have a suspicion that there may possibly be a little sprinkle of extremists among the New-thoughters.

Write me down, Mr. Editor, as being for the "reformation of the individual" man, and for the removal of bad environments as well. The wise farmer does not depend alone on good seed. He has a care about the soil and other conditions necessary to produce a good crop.

He who would develop his own innate goodness must assist his fellow-man in developing his.

WILL POWER VERSUS OBSESSION.

Views of Various Writers—A Medium's Painful Experience, Illustrating the Kaleidoscopic Character of Spirit Return—The World Advances, at the Same Time Encountering the Good as Well as the Bad.

In the present symposium of our earnest, liberal Progressive Thinker the common belief of Spiritualists is being clearly defined; here we find Lyman C. Howe specifying important points of agreement, one is that, "All varieties of spirits exist after death and are liable to share in the communications received."

Mrs. Mary T. Longley adds "The subject of obsession I consider important; I think that nine-tenths of our experienced Spiritualists believe, with reason, that human beings who are malicious on this earth tarry a period in earth's atmosphere and torment sensitive mortals," therefore obsession can properly be called a common ground of belief.

Spirit John Pierpont, Faraday and a host from the spirit realms do know of, and have taught the facts concerning obsession; all the testimonies compiled in the many books now published on obsession are actual experiences, by conscious intelligent persons; therefore, obsession is not only a belief, but a knowledge.

Hudson Tuttle says: "A spirit may be in error, misinformed and prejudiced, just the same as before leaving its earthly body."

Read Dr. J. M. Peebles' and Walter DeVoe's books on obsession, and Dr. G. Lester Lane's experiences direct and indirectly through his patients.

All Spiritualists hold the common belief that truthful, intelligent spirits do communicate and control for the unlifting of humanity, and Faraday says, "That by the same law as come the good, so come those of evil intent," the motive being as different as the motive of the honest college professor from that of the criminal holdup.

A July issue of your excellent paper contained a most important article on the "Will as a Remedial Power in Cases of Obsession," one that should be in the hands of every developing sensitive, and yet the noble author was compelled to seek aid beyond the power of her own will aided by mental science.

In the case of the author, Nora Batchelor, I find almost a duplicate of a Mrs. N., of Boston, whom I interviewed two years ago, and who had prided herself that she could not be hypnotized or impelled to do anything against her will, a claim made by that majority who do not fully consider the facts in case of obsession.

Mrs. N. had attended lectures, seances, and sat for development, attained to spiritual sight and hearing, had found her ideal religion, one of knowledge, spirituality, love and immortal life.

A change of location became necessary, but the new environments seemed to possess an unhappy, intangible something, an uncertainty as to her spiritual sight and hearing arose, then a restlessness, a fear, and yet she began to be impressed as to the smallest duties of the home, but unsatisfactorily, all the happy, loving trust, the peace of mind and former bright anticipations seemed blotted out.

The presence of strange, shadowy beings dwarfed and malicious in thought, began to be sensed.

Mrs. N. had only heard of the true and beautiful from the lecturer and seance room, or with her own spiritual vision, and the truth that death does not change the evil-minded, nor law, nor God withhold them from using their will power upon sensitives, burst upon her consciousness with terror.

All her power of will to oppose, command, persuade, or reason, they scoffed; she was unable to lay hold of them and force them to leave, or to cease their talking, she was told, "that they were there first and meant to stay or go when she did."

The reading of beautiful literature, became as blank, as soon as read, names and placing of articles could not be remembered, the brain cells were being injured by a current like force concentrated on the brain and spine, allowing of but little sleep.

At times the nerve, or vital fluid seemed to be drawn from head and chest as if invisible mist, depleting her strength.

This is a condition that is never taken into account by those declaring there is no such thing as obsession, that a person cannot be impelled against her own will, nor do they remember that there are many wills operating against her lone will. Could Mrs. N. resist a half-dozen hold-ups and vanquish them?

When through days and nights of such mental contest and physical pain, walled in as it were by such persistent cruelty, holding on to consciousness, she was merely existing.

Those who have never had to cling to consciousness that they might be conscious at all, with the fact in mind that when consciousness was gone, what the world thought to be Mrs. N., would only be the concentrated will, consciousness and deeds of these evil-minded beings controlling her, those who have never looked at obsession in this light are in no way fitted to criticise. Mrs. N. had been impelled to hear, to think and to do things against her will.

Listen to the testimonies in our court rooms, men and women testifying, "I felt impelled to do so and so. I did not wish to." It was relief from the unseen forces, that was needed, and not a loathsome cell.

Like did not attract like, for Mrs. N. was spiritual and honest.

Nora Batchelor with all her self-assertion of the divine within and her just right to life, health and happiness found the necessity of something more than will power.

In Mrs. N.'s case Dr. G. Lester Lane was called to her aid, and with the cooperation of his spirit physicians and Oriental healers the destructive malicious obsessing forces were made to desist and depart, the depleted mind and body were restored to normal health, the spiritual sight and hearing made possible, to the unspeakable joy of Mrs. N. and the dear departed who had not been able to protect her from the spirit side.

Mrs. N.'s gratitude and praise for Dr. Lane and his noble, loving spirit coworkers was unlimited; she became able to see their methods of healing, the spiritual colors and chemicals used, the white healing vapor supplied by the Orientals, and sensed their kindly advice for her future.

The instruction and kindly advice given free by the Doctor are well worth the taking of a course of treatment to acquire.

The very atmosphere of this kind doctor and his lovely psychic wife and their spirit guardians fill their home with an atmosphere not of this earth, only in its transplanting from spiritual spheres, a spiritual oasis 'mid life's materiality.

To any one who may be suffering from annoying spirit forces, or any nervous ailment aside from spirit influence, I would advise them to seek restoration from some tried and true specialist.

The success of the will versus obsession, depends upon a [illegible]

SOUTHERN CASSADAGA.

Spiritualist Camp-Meeting at Lake Helen, Florida, February 4 to March 18, 1906.

As the fall advances, the people are hastening from the north and west to the "Land of sunshine and flowers," especially to the genial climate of this charming winter home.

In preparation for the hundreds to come, a number of new cottages for rent are being builded, and additions made to cottages already erected.

Mr. Bedell has about completed a four-tenement house on the Stevens property. He is also putting down an artesian well for the new village springing up just north of the gate. The Bedell family have remained on his orange grove all summer.

Mrs. Hurley's house on Prospect Heights is well advanced.

Mr. Bartholomew has a cozy cottage of three rooms ready for rent, in addition to his two other cottages.

Lake Colby is full of water, and the fleet of boats is ready for the lovers of moonlit nights.

Mrs. Pratt's cottage on the Huff Peninsula, has been begun.

The dining-room of Hotel Cassadaga has been let to Mrs. Sherman and Mrs. Lloyd.

Mrs. Huff has had the hotel well renovated and it is now ready for guests.

Mrs. Haviland has a gem of a cottage on the Stevens property, next to the gate fence.

The new Beckwith cottage is occupied by a tenant, as Mr. Beckwith will not be at camp this season.

The bicycle path of clay has been completed from camp to Lake Helen village, where it joins the one running to DeLand. Riders should bring their wheels; both ladies and gentlemen. Bicycle riding is popular in Florida for both sexes. Clyde steamships carry wheels free. They need not be crated.

Mr. F. J. Norman, with his children, are living at camp.

Dwellers at camp write that the weather is superb—the health of the people is good—and no malarial conditions have been observed the past summer.

Mrs. Philbrook has a neat lawn and beds of flowers around her pretty cottage, which have attracted the admiring attention of visitors the past summer.

Mrs. Fisher and friend will occupy rooms in her cottage, as well as Mrs. Bacon.

People who intend to keep house, should engage rooms early, as the demand is large. Address for rooms in Apartment House, Mrs. J. D. Palmer, Willoughby, Ohio; for sleeping rooms in Brigham Hall, address Mrs. Sarah Brigham, Fitchburg, Mass; for new cottages address H. M. Clark, Lake Helen, and Mr. Bedell, same place.

Mr. Johnson, the builder, has completed a six-room house on the Stevens property and moved in. He is now engaged in building a cottage on Prospect Heights for W. E. Greenwood.

H. M. Clark sails for Florida with a large party Oct. 31. He will erect another cottage on Prospect Heights.

Mrs. Spencer is boarding the carpenters at present.

Some twenty-five people from Lily Dale, N. Y., are expected in November.

Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson is to have rooms with Mrs. Hardenburg in the Bond Cottage.

Arthur Underhill and son are at camp, the son attending school at Stetson University at DeLand. Judge Underhill is much better in health, and intends to spend the winter at camp. His daughter, Mrs. Fogle, will accompany him.

The proposed rose garden near the hotel has not yet materialized, but probably something will be done next month. Some shade trees ought to be set out around it this fall, as this is the best time in the year for such work, and the roses will need shade from the scorching effect of the summer sun.

The store has been moved back of the Apartment House, and is now used for a carpenter's shop.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

His Farewell Address on Leaving Springfield, Ill., Monday, February 11, 1861, to Go to Washington,, to Be Inaugurated President, Delivered on the Car Platform in Springfield, Illinois.

Friends:—No one who has never been placed in a like position, can understand my feelings at this hour, nor the oppressive sadness I feel at this parting.

For more than a quarter of a century I have lived among you, and during all that time, have received nothing but kindness at your hands. Here I have lived from my youth until now I am an old man. Here the most sacred ties of earth were assumed; here all my children were born, and here one of them lies buried.

To you, dear friends, I owe all that I have, all that I am. All the strange chequered past seems to crowd now upon my mind. To-day I leave you. I go to assume a task more difficult than that which devolved upon General Washington. Unless the Great God, who assisted him, shall be with me, and aid me, I must fail. But if the Omniscient Mind and the same Almighty arm that directed and protected him, shall guide and support me, I shall not fail—I shall succeed. Let us all pray that the God of our fathers may not forsake us now. To him I commend you all. Permit me to ask, that with equal sincerity and faith, you all will invoke his wisdom and guidance for me. With these few words I must leave you, for how long I know not. Friends, one and all, I must now bid you an affectionate farewell."

A SYMPOSIUM.

Suggested by Dr. Alex. Caird, of Lynn, Mass.

Massachusetts steps to the front and demands a hearing. Alex. Caird, M. D., an influential Spiritualist, suggests a Symposium on an exceedingly important subject. It will be inaugurated in his special honor as a leading and highly respected Spiritualist of the Old Bay State, one who is constantly working for the spread of the Truth as manifested in Spirit Return.. It will prove especially interesting, suggestive and valuable to every reflective mind.

The Important Question.

What Does Spiritualism Teach That Spiritualists Believe in Common?

The Eminent Sar-gis Expresses Hir Views.

To the Editor:—Your letter asking a contribution to a symposium as to Dr. Caird's topic, "What Does Spiritualism Teach That Spiritualists Believe in Common," has been received, and of course it is flattering to be deemed eligible to that class. But to write even to satisfy oneself requires to be in the mood. But of late the Spiritualistic atmosphere has been so charged with insolubrious gases that a smothering feeling is felt when trying to treat the subject by writing. And if what follows may sometimes seem to wander from the text it must find excuse in this condition.

You say "the secular press is stealing our thunder." No, not our thunder, but are giving the thunder of our facts, minus the depreciation that is too common in our own circles. The ill-concealed war on mediumship will kill the "movement," unless the "secular" press rescues it by giving its facts and incidents.

And in this is a hint for mediums: If mediums would organize, even so far as concert of action in that direction, and by an understanding with the press to give their reports of seances, as news, they would give a "boom" to Spiritualism such as the most optimistic have not dreamed of. The way is open, for at last the press has given a hearing by printing the news as to Spiritualism as of any other matter of public interest, and there is not a city in the country with a daily paper but would give the reports of mediumship—as news—divested of course of advertising features. As to "frauds"—the average reporter would see to that with a discrimination and efficiency to which the present method is crudeness itself. Such a course would soon bring the platform and "Rev." managers to terms.

Our enemies—the priesthoods—get all their ammunition for offensive attack from our own wranglings—platform and press—but a short application of this remedy would settle the trouble for good.

As it looks to the subscriber, the consequential bigotry that now openly decries mediumship is the beginning of the end if it is encouraged by the channels through which the modern public is reached.

The "fraud" question is not for discussion here. Enough has been and is being written on that subject to give a healthy mind an aggravated case of dyspepsia. The supercilious fling of the agitators: "Do you advocate condoning fraud?" is simply the insult of a shallow mind and cannot be fittingly answered beyond arm's length. This cry is as old as the cracking of the toe and knee joints of the Fox girls. Its too often effect is to disparage mediumship and discourage mediums, and no one of the sponsors for it can put their finger on a Spiritualist who ever favored it.

But aside from all this, there is a serious side to it. Every article in the Open Court has been read, also those before the Court of Appeals, those even when the courts were in vacation. And truth, from this standpoint compels the statement that never has been aggregated so much crudeness as to spirit phenomena in twenty-five years' observation, experiences and familiarity with it.

Ignorance is a harsh term, and should not be used toward people who as a rule are honest and intelligent, many of them persons of culture and refinement. But any one who has given time and a wide investigation, with experience as to phenomena, could not fail to be impressed with the want of knowledge manifested by many who for years have been accredited as teachers of our rank and file. The evidence is innate in their writings. A man may make an address full of learning and culture, but as a teacher of the conditions of mediumship, as barren as an almanac.

Particularly is this true as to materialization. The popular concept as to this phase is so absolutely material as to eliminate the element of spirit agency altogether. That the one is from and of the other is to them unthinkable. There is only one way to the understanding of this phase—long, patient observation, opportunity and study.

In the first place, spirit manifestation and mediumship are indissoluble and inseparable. The one cannot be without the other. Materialization is not from the volition of the spirit manifesting alone, but reinforced by the elements or conditions in the medium—the temporary growing out from the stable form. The whole process is chemical, and like all visible compounds must have the needed elements in the proper proportions.

Thus, when the spirit form that came from Dr. Monck's form was given an apple and bit into it, the mouthful bit off by the spirit form came out of Dr. Monck's mouth. To the student and investigator of experience this was the natural and inevitable result, but to the average discusser of fraud it is as inexplicable as the corona of the sun to the smoked glass observer of an eclipse. And now as to the manifesting of phenomena:

Suppose it comes to the ear by words. To utter words requires a larynx. No power on earth can talk without a larynx. The "control" will tell you he "borrows" the vocal organs of the entranced medium. This has been told ten thousand times, yet to the general it goes in at one ear and out of the other.

Again, words come from the trumpet? Why? Because the walls of the horn help to concentrate substances to materialize a larynx. In this case the power to form is "borrowed," instead of borrowing the already formed organ as by the control. The writer has seen one of those long club gourds used as a trumpet and as satisfactorily as the most elaborate manufactured ones. Independent voice mediums are rare, having the power to form the larynx without the aid of the trumpet, but those familiar with Mrs. Hollis-Billings or Louie Lowe, know how marvelous and superior is this rare form of mediumship.

As to slate-writing: So open, so free from criticism is this form of manifestation, that the crusaders have not yet attacked it, although a foot-print here and there shows it is only a question of time and sympathy, which is being sedulously cultivated.

But to return: Materialization, so-called, is essentially a matter of power, depending upon the force the spirit chemists can obtain from the medium and the circle—the storage battery in other words. This force varies of necessity on each change of the sitters. The condensation of substance to produce form is as a rule within the aura or atmosphere of the medium, where it can be utilized free from the impinging aura of the sitters. This is why so large an aura is required between the circle and the cabinet—the latter serving the same purpose as the walls of the trumpet—condensing substance.

Again, the most unripe mentality ought to realize that a materialization must traverse all the stages from the invisible to the tangible. Your fire-poker came from the ore and in that form it is unknown. It may cost you from a shilling to a dollar according to the skill and knowledge employed—but the cruder one is not necessarily a spurious article.

Manifestation, they tell us, is simply a matter of force or power. We measure force by units we call horse-powers. When we wish increased results we increase the horse-power of our machines. Precisely analogous is spirit power in all physical manifestations. One unit may produce a rap, five a hand, ten a face, twenty a form. And the power of persistence of this form and the more or less perfectness of manifestation is just in proportion to the units available from the conditions of the circle—or the storage battery may supply. This explanation ought to be material enough for any one to comprehend. Spirits are but people and they manifest in conformity to nature and its laws.

And now about "toggery." Lace-making, as it is called, was a very common and one of the very earliest physical manifestations, as by Honto in the seance of the Eddy brothers. Its evident lesson was the ability and facility of spirit chemists to change the form of substance or fabrics—a handkerchief being transformed into lace or similar appearing thing of ten-fold the original size, and reproduced in its original integrity. This has been manifested before our eyes for more than fifty years, yet its obvious purpose has not been apprehended by the two-seance philosophers, who strangely persist in treating spirits as beings without sense or purpose—a sort of puppets who pose in queer pranks for show purposes and our entertainment. Such minds fitly furnish the very fallow ground for fraud.

And again, why is white the predominant color of drapery in materialization? Because white is the normal or neutral color. In the earlier stages of the planet before the sun exercised so potent a force as now, white was the color of vegetable life—of all flowers. It requires a force to produce the chemical combination that makes colors. White has always been an emblem of purity, because it has not been subjected to influences that modify primal conditions. Yet the fault-finder has never got along that far as to nature—and spirit is very close to nature and its manifestations always lessons—if we so take them.

Suppose your friend who died at eighty years comes to you, and you have him in your mind at forty? Unless he comes as in your mind it is a fraud. Our magazines are prolific in biographical sketches of noted men with photographs at ten-year intervals—no two of which would be taken for the same man by a stranger. And compare the young Queen Victoria with her long hair smoothly combed down the sides of her face and in hoop-skirts, with the matron Queen of the anniversary year. Recognition of spirits is subject to these conditions. Time and time again when suggestion was made as to how the presentation differed from the memory, has change to more familiar personality been made. Yet all these things are overlooked—or were never within the experience of the rusher into print. Expose on the instant the medium or the pretended medium detected with "toggery," but first be sure you have at least some knowledge of spirit power or that of the transformation.

For example: Here is an experience absolutely exact in every detail. Sitting in an open double parlor, in broad sunlight, at two o'clock of an August afternoon, with every window and door open to the street end rear of the house, with the thermometer in the eighties, with no intent or expectation of a "sitting," talking socially with a lady, mediumistic but not a professional medium. A change in her features began to show. To the inquiry if she felt anything unusual, the reply was "no." As the change involved one feature after another and the fact was told her, she simply replied that the observer was trying to be funny. And when at last she had entirely disappeared and an old man, semi-bald, gray hair, mustache and beard had taken her place, she laughingly insisted that the observer was jesting.

It was then that the overshadowing influence spoke, in a strong masculine voice and in a foreign accent: "I must now entrance the lady, so as to talk with you." And he did for many minutes. He stated that finding conditions unusually favorable he wanted to show the observer an example of materialization and transfiguration, only the same in degree of power, so that all skepticism in his mind might be removed. He then said that if the lady had more materializing power he could present himself as he was in life, six feet tall and sixty-two years old. After farther conversation he said he must retire, but not abruptly so as to shock the medium. Finally he said: "Place your hand on my shoulder and see how quickly I will disappear and your hand rest on the lady." Which occurred as he said.

Now, the observer had before him an example and illustration of both materialization and transfiguration, and their explanation by the spirit operator, under conditions absolute and all unexpected. The lady was entirely in her normal condition as the changes were taking place, wiping her face with her handkerchief, as the air was warm and sultry, and laughingly insisting she was being jested with—until entranced. But here was a man in her chair, with coat and other garments of man's apparel, while the woman with a full head of hair, no gray in it, fresh, blonde complexion, in a light summer dress, had disappeared as completely as if out of the room. These are the simple, unadorned facts.

Now, had the lady been in a cabinet, and brought out thus transformed, and the observer had put his hand on the old man's shoulder—or "grabbed" him—and rested as it did on the lady—and then what? This is a good place to refer the matter to the imagination of the reader. The two-seance tester would go wild at such an overwhelming exposure of "fraud."

That such things are, or may be, should make investigation into phenomena the business of cool-headed, well-balanced men and women, with at least some appreciation of what spirit power and mediumship means, and how impossible the one without the other. Without the lady, the spirit would still have been invisible—and the lesson lost. But the blending of spirit force and mediumistic chemical elements enabled the one to make himself by a change of the conditions of feature and clothing of the one displaced. The how cannot be ascertained in a hot room at a camp meeting, crowded with people to whom spirit coming is simply a show to which they have bought tickets of admission.

It may not be out of order to say that in a fifteen years' familiarity with the mediumship of this lady this was the only time a materialization was ever witnessed through it, and she said the only one ever mentioned by any one. Another very interesting fact.

Now, this may seem wandering from the Dr. Caird text—all contributions to which have been read up to date, but under all that and like discussions lurks those of mediums and their work. Nor is what is here said any attempt at "condoning fraud." If there is anything odious over the ordinary it is simulation or assumption of spirit manifestation by anybody, medium or fakir. But until the platform deals exclusively in discourses, lectures and expositions original with the speaker, clear of plagiarisms, it should be modest as to faults that have no greater motive than desire for popular applause and patronage.

A little matter in parenthesis—which is often the best part of a speech. There is a sort of superior class among us who decry anything but "cultured talent" on the platform—such as the "Rev." people. To this class Indian controls are anathema. They never stop to think that the people who go over to the spirit world are those who come back, and that the Indian has been going over for ages before the Spanish butchers discovered them. But to the parenthesis:

By the journal of the Lewis and Clarke expedition, of October 14, 1804, they were in camp on the upper Missouri river in what is now the Dakotas, in the country of the Rickaree Indians. This is the extract from their journal: "One of the soldiers, tried by a court martial for mutinous conduct, was sentenced to receive seventy-five lashes on the bare back. The sentence was then and there carried out. A Rickaree chief, who accompanied the party for a time, was so affected by the sight that he cried aloud during the whole proceeding. He stated that his people never whip even their children at any age."

What a contrast is this to another record: Proverbs 13:24, "He that spareth his rod hateth his son; but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes." Also Proverbs 23:13-14, "Withhold not correction from the child, for if thou beatest him with the rod he shall not die. Thou shalt beat him with the rod, and shalt deliver his soul from hell." Let us be frank and honest—which of the two is to be preferred as a "control" in this twentieth century, A. D.—the Rickaree Indian chief or Solomon? But this is only a parenthesis.

Mrs. Clara Watson scores religion with a force that is almost religious in itself. But Dr. Caird wants to know what we "believe" in common. The two are almost synonyms. Religion consists wholly in belief, and belief is simply credence, trust, opinion, faith. Neither has any anchorage in knowledge, but in essence are without knowing—speculation. What is knowledge or to know, is to comprehend a fact, a certainty, without doubt—demonstration.

Now, what are we asked to do? To pass over the facts of phenomena, of demonstration, and agree to organize on what outside these facts we may think probable. This is simply what all the religious organizations in the history of man have been trying to do, with the success we can see. Can we do any better by patterning after their methods?

As Ervin A. Rice so forcibly says: "Spirit Return" is the only common point of belief among Spiritualists. And it is so because demonstrated. And while E. W. Baldwin says there are many things we have in common, yet "the corner-stone of the faith is mediumship." Without it and the heavens would again be shrouded in darkness." True as the stars.

Mrs. Longley says in effect we can all agree to disagree. That is about what we are doing. And if only those disagreeing would be less disagreeable things would be better.

Now, everybody who reads, observes and thinks dispassionately knows that the mental emancipation of this age, in so far as it has progressed, is due to the mediumship of Modern Spiritualism. But for it the human mind would still be in the shackles of a god idea that shocked the Rickaree chief the first white men he had ever seen. When will our organizations see what is needed? More mediums and their restoration to their original status in the "movement." They can see what the discussion of "fraud" has disclosed—that is two facts: (1) That there are persons who for gain simulate mediumistic phenomena and deceive some very good, but very credulous, ill-informed people.

(2) That many who discuss the matter in the public prints are of this ill-advised, inexperienced class. To remedy this condition is not to deal in epithet and to the great outside world throw discredit on mediumship, per se.

If, as all agree that "Spirit Return" is the common ground, the key to universal concord, then it is absolute that it is only by and through mediumship that this Return has been or can be demonstrated. The business of organizations—as mediumship is a thing of persons who have to live, as all live—is and ought to be first the care and conservation of mediumship and mediums. When this condition is restored, the millennial time in our ranks will come again.

And to close—what is this Return? The spirit man is as he was here. The demonstration is, and logically ought to be as varied as are the returning dead, and as the living visited. No two minds in all the universe are alike—be it the living or the dead. To convince the living man the evidence must meet his mental demand. To meet the demand the dead man must come as his capability will allow. This is the mutual situation in Spirit Return. The Return must meet the demand of the party to whom it is made. Unless it is so the visit is vain. And who is to decide? Is it the man who knew the dead man, or the spectator who knew neither of the parties? This covers the case as to a majority of the criticism that seeks the use of types.

All the organizations that ever existed or can be devised cannot alter that fact—it is fundamental and organic. Some minds may be reached by forensic methods from our platform—but that only incites belief. The vast aggregate must have proof palpable. And that proof must be through the senses and with mental endorsement. Common agreement on these lines organizes itself.

THE LATE N. S. A. CONVENTION.

A Commendatory Review of Its Work, by Moses Hull.

At this date, October 21, though tired out, I am filled with the spirit of the convention just closed. It was the largest, most harmonious, and in every way the best convention the Spiritualists ever held. The beautiful, progressive and thorough-going city of Minneapolis is just the place to hold such a convention. The Spiritualists of Minneapolis, St. Paul and surrounding country are just the people to entertain and take care of such a convention. The Spiritualists of Minnesota, and especially the members of the state association, well officered as it is, are wide awake, and ready for almost any emergency.

Bro. E. W. Sprague said in his little talk at the general reception on Monday night, before the regular convention began, that he had it directly from the psychic side of life that this was to be the best convention the Spiritualists had ever held. He was right. It was the largest, and in every sense of the word the best convention I ever attended.

The Universalists, the Woman Suffragists, and, I believe, the American Sunday-school Union all held conventions in Minneapolis while ours was in session. All exchanged greetings with us. The Universalists sent a Rev. Mr. Rose to our convention to make a speech to our people, in exchange for one of our speakers, I believe, who went and spoke to their audience. I happened to be on our committee on resolutions, which suspended work long enough to hear Mr. Rose. One cannot well imagine a more eloquent, rhetorical and logical speech than this man delivered. Nothing ever came from a Spiritualist speaker in the directions mentioned, that excelled this address. It set me to longing more than ever for an educated ministry in our ranks.

Right here I am reminded that the world of Spiritualists is becoming interested in the Morris Pratt School. President Barrett made a fine presentment of the school and its needs in his report. The committee on the report gave the school a place on the program. After making a few remarks myself, I called upon Rev. Will J. Erwood, who made a telling speech in behalf of the school, then John D. Vail, another of our trustees, and our auditor, said he had spent over two months in examining our books from the very first to the last item of receipts and expenses, and that the books were not kept orthodoxically, our secretary, Mrs. Stewart, not being an experienced book-keeper, but he could not find a mistake of even one cent in the books, nor could he find one cent of misappropriation of funds After remarks by Mrs. Stewart and others, Attorney Willing, of Iowa, after a few eloquent remarks, moved that the N. S. A. appropriate five hundred dollars to assist the Morris Pratt school in its work. Attorney Hulbert, of Iowa, moved to amend by raising the appropriation to one thousand dollars. The amendment carried, and the Institute is one thousand dollars better off as a result. Our secretary, Mrs. Stewart did yeoman service both for the school and the N. S. A.

The resolutions passed by the Association had the true ring and embraced a variety of subjects. After affirming that our cause is based on the demonstrable facts of spirit life, and communications with the denizens of that life; that the facts and philosophy of Spiritualism have enlisted the attention of the learned people of the world, and that Spiritualism is being accepted as based upon fact, we hereby declare that we are proud to proclaim its rapid progress in bringing this great fact and its resultant philosophy to the world.

The resolutions began by affirming the existence of a spiritual world filled with spiritual things and peopled with spiritual beings who were as tangible in their world as we are in ours; that we can become so spiritually developed as to come in touch with those things and that people. Spiritualism is a religion which works for every good for its devotees. A practical application of Spiritualism provides for the material wants as well as for the spiritual wants of those who are in need.

These are followed by strong resolutions on education, and particularly endorsing the work of the Morris Pratt school. Capital punishment, wars, and the cultivation of the war spirit in our schools, were condemned as something which were calculated to keep up the spirit of war and murder. A resolution followed these urging a systematic course of reading, to be pursued under the management of a wise committee for the use of the home and of small churches and societies where regular speakers cannot be had. In fact a committee was chosen by the convention to prepare such reading matter as would build up Spiritualism in the minds of those who read or listen to such reading. Equal suffrage without regard to sex was the subject of another resolution. The spirit of commercial mediumship, and of societies looking more after the dollars than after the good of the people was condemned in further resolutions. Other important resolutions were passed, but I do not at this moment recall them.

The night meetings were so large that it was with great difficulty that we could get all into the house that came determined to hear. Some nights the crowds could not be accommodated. The last night I personally know that hundreds were turned away for want even of standing room.

All went away from the convention, so far as I know, determined that their own Spiritualism should in the future be more of a working factor than it had ever been before.

Our president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, together with the whole board of trustees had failed to give perfect satisfaction, so the association determined to elect them again and give them another year's trial. The result was a re-election of every officer.

I cannot close this letter without congratulating everybody that The Progressive Thinker is to publish a report of the reports of each officer and servant of the N. S. A., and then re-issuing that report in pamphlet form. I shall be disappointed if the pamphlets containing these reports are not scattered like autumn leaves. The N. S. A. holds its next convention in Chicago.

LAW RETRIBUTIVE.

When she touched those little ringlets and those little hands she kissed;
When she pressed them to her bosom with a love that can exist
But within a mother's spirit, did she think they e'er would turn
And in cold and cruel actions all her tender feelings spurn?

As she watched them and grew weary thro' each night and livelong day,
Did she ever think another could entice her babes away?
Did she think the love they bore her could be smothered by a kind
That is only fit for mating in the youthful human mind?

When she rubbed their little bodies, and she pinched their little toes,
Did that mother ever wonder or for e'er
once pre-suppose,
That her sacred, tender feeling, and her loving words and thought,
To her babes grown into manhood, would be wasted, would be naught?

Oh, how cold must be the human, aye,
how callous to the core,
Who in passion or in calmness turns a mother from his door!
Such must sometime, in full justice, be rewarded for his crime,
And be taught a loving mother is a being most sublime.

Ev'ry cloud of gloom and sorrow, ev'ry sneer and ev'ry spurn,
He has cast upon his mother must upon his life return.
Ev'ry tear of pain and anguish he has caused her soul to shed,
Shall return in bitter sorrow in due time upon his head.

GREAT POWER AT SMALL COST.

Some Pertinent Reflections on Criticism, by the Chicago Chronicle.

There is only one way in which the investment of 2 cents gives the investor the right to visit unsparring criticism or condemnation upon the conduct of a business involving an investment of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

When a man buys a copy of a daily newspaper he feels that he is ipso facto entitled to expostulate with the management of that journal when its editorial policy does not conform to his views.

In many cases it is probable that the critic does not even make the preliminary investment of 2 cents, but acquires his right of censorship vicariously by reading a newspaper for which somebody else has paid 2 cents. As a general thing, however, we may concede that the 2 cents has been invested and the right of review thereby acquired.

Thereupon the investor proceeds to exercise his prerogative of telling the newspaper management wherein it is wrong.

"I have read your paper for ten years"—which may mean ten days or ten minutes—"and I have usually found it safe, sane and sensible. In this morning's issue, however, I find an editorial article which is the climax of imbecility and dishonesty. I refer, of course, to the driveling disquisition on"—anything from the tariff to the weather which does not meet the complainant's views. The critic has paid his 2 cents and proposes to get his money's worth. Every editorial office in the country is familiar with the proposition.

Sometimes the critic is moderate in his reprehension; oftener he is savage and unsparing in his denunciation of what he deems a journalistic departure from the path of rectitude in any matter than can be mentioned. The 2-cent investment has armed him with plenary powers in the way of eversight and regulation. Woe to the editor who falls short of the high requirements of the investor.

Of course the critic would not dream of carrying out his policy of severe criticism under similar conditions in other directions. He would not, for instance, having bought a pound of butter at the corner grocery, proceed to snake a minatory finger under the grocer's nose and inform him that his religious views were heretical and damnable. He would not consider himself warranted in denouncing the milkman's political beliefs by virtue of having bought a pint of milk from that tradesman. His mission of criticism and regulation is confined to the newspaper, and he acquires his authority by the payment of the 2 cents. Was ever such a valuable privilege acquired at such a small price!

Yet the critic of newspapers is all right—bless him! If he sometimes contributes to journalistic entertainment he also affords an occasional index to public feeling. His impulses are usually commendable, and if his language is frequently somewhat tinged with asperity we must credit it to the strength of his convictions.

At any rate, we shall always have him with us so long as he has the necessary 2 cents to establish his authority or so long as he can get hold of the newspaper which has cost someone else 2 cents. Tradition and precedent have made him the supreme censor.

Valuable Geological Facts.

A learned writer in the Scientific American says:

"The Horseshoe Falls, at Niagara, has receded more than 260 feet within the memory of living men, and is now advancing at the rate of 500 feet in a century."

This advance will equal a mile in a thousand years. Continued at that rate of recession in from 22,000 to 25,000 years, where now is Lake Erie, will roll a mighty river, an expansion westward of the St. Lawrence to Toledo, possibly to Detroit. The wide expanse of waters will be narrowed to a broad channel while probably lesser lakes will mark its course. The general bed of the old lake will show cultivated fields, with flocks and herds; and the banks of the new river will be dotted with populous and prosperous cities and homes of a highly cultivated people.

This is projecting unwritten history by a single bound a little way into the future, and applying our knowledge of the past to what is to be.

The whole surface of the earth is a history of the eternity that has been. Hills and mountains upheaved by internal fires, show the erosion of waters which have dashed upon their sides, the rivers bearing the debris to the ocean, and silting up its bed. Continents have gone down, and others have emerged from the watery abyss. Nothing is stable. Tennyson, in his Memoriam, has rendered the idea:

"There rolls the deep where grew the tree.
O earth, what changes thou hast seen!
There where the long sea roars, hath been
The stillness of the central sea.

"The hills are shadows, and they flow
From form to form, and nothing stands;
They melt like mist, the solid lands,
Like clouds they shape themselves and go."

Every grain of sand the wide world over, or in the depths of the ocean, is but the fragment of a rock, broken in pieces by the crushing waves, rock dashed on other rocks, producing sand and dust as the ultimate. Every particle of salt held in solution by sea or ocean came from disintegrated rock. The minerals, all of them, seem to have been laid down by electrical action, originally, like salt, held in chemical solution. The same is true of the lime-rock and gypsum. Marble is but melted and granulated lime rock. The beds of coal, whether anthracite, bituminous or lignite, are remains of ancient forests, prostrated by wind or wave, and buried for countless eons by drift and ocean.

Thus a very feeble conception of the eternity of years which have been. They suggest the eternity that lies before. The 6,000 years the Bible relates since the dawn of creation are but the minutest fraction of time compared to the infinite whole.

It is well to keep these things in mind when the preacher is relating the story of creation; for though ten thousand Gabriels shall shout, "Time shall be no longer," this grand old earth will still revolve on its axis, will still swing in its annual circuit around the sun, obeying the primal law common to companion worlds, and roll on forever. Change awaits them all, and is ever going on, but destruction never!

What Does It Mean?

The National Daily Review of this city during an article headed "Study Aboriginal Tribes," telling of the tribe of Tarahumares, who are cave dwellers, who are represented as exceedingly primitive in their manners and customs, and residing in the Sierra Madres, of Mexico, who were lately visited by Prof. Carl Lumholtz, and reports:

"These cave-dweller Indians, like many other tribes worshiped the holy cross even before the conquest of Mexico by Cortes. There were three crosses worshiped by these Indians. One represented the sun, another the moon, and the third the planet Venus. They derived the cross from nature. It was conceived from the position shown by a man standing erect with his arms outstretched, forming a cross."

This is no new discovery of the emblem of the cross in Mexico. It is everywhere found among the ancient ruins, with proofs that it was venerated by the natives before the Spanish invasion, as it was among the Oriental nations of the old world many centuries before the advent of Christianity. It was a sign of victory, and as such appeared on the ensign at the head of the Roman armies when engaged in battle.

Ignorance supposes the cross first appeared as an emblem of Christianity. If so then Christianity must have antedated by more than a thousand years the birth of its alleged founder.

It Puzzles an Old-Time Editor

The Progressive Thinker is a magnificent paper. I have been a subscriber to it since you issued the first copy. I like it better the longer I read it. I have been an editor and publisher of newspapers for thirty years, and how you can furnish such a splendid publication for $1.00 per year, and keep out of the hands of the sheriff, is a problem I cannot solve. Possible Fountain of Church Frauds.

In a protracted correspondence several years ago with a prominent European scholar, well versed in French, he wrote in one of his letters:

"There are many French words, Grecianized, in the Pauline Epistles. They are so numerous we must infer the author of the original Greek from which the Epistles have been rendered into modern European languages, was a Frenchman, with an imperfect knowledge of classical Greek."

The writer then suggested:

"To thoroughly ventilate this subject requires the services of an honest, well-learned, and deeply read Frenchman, whose only ambition should be to gain the truth. It will be found modern European languages have been drawn upon, not only in the composition of the New Testament, but I find traces of them in the Septuagint, sufficient to raise a question as to its ancient origin."

The College of Sorbonne, at Paris, chartered by the French government in 1253, at the instance of an ecclesiastic, its object to educate youth for the Catholic priesthood, demands consideration when in search of stupendous church frauds.

Butler's Hudibras refers to the character of the Doctors composing the faculty of that institution in the distich:

"He a rope of sand could twist
As tough as learned Sorbonnists."

The professors of this college were resorted to for dogmatic opinions and decisions in canon law. The college was in active operation when the Council of Trent was convened in 1545, the object of that council, to defeat the Protestant heresy of Luther and his co-reformers. Its students were ever active in rendering learned aid to Catholicism. The professors justified burning at the stake Joan of Arc, as it did the massacre of St. Bartholomew. The Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 18, p. 288, says: "The decisions of the Sorbonne were well nigh as authoritative as those of Rome."

The first works printed in France were from the press of the Sorbonne, which was established by Jean de la Pierre, prior of the university, in 1469. The first piece of printing which bore date, was on Indulgence, seven editions of which were issued to raise money to fight the Turks. Any crime was tolerated so the offender supplied the cash.

How much this ecclesiastical institution contributed in shaping Catholicism, commencing while the Crusaders were yet active, we cannot know. We do know it became so oppressive it was suppressed by the people in the French Revolution of 1789.

Was Paul invented, and were his Epistles written to supply a real want in Catholic literature about the time Luther entered the ministry? and is that literature false which half-learned scholars quote with self-laudation, confirming the antiquity of that ecclesiastical literature? Hardouin, near 200 years ago, said it was. Prof. Johnson reached the same conclusion, while yet ignorant of what Hardouin had written. And last, Hon. Alexander Del Mar, writing as a Christian author, confirms their statements.

As Spiritualists are not legitimately an engraft, nor a scion of Christianity it little matters what conclusion is reached, save as searchers for truth we are curious to know the facts.

Some Pointed Questions.

Any calamity befalling humanity, the preachers tell us is the direct interposition of Almighty God, to punish offenders for some infraction of his law. Lightning, wind, and wave, and flood, are represented as God's messengers to wreak vengeance on the guilty. The world was drowned, and nearly all life in it, because of the wickedness of the race; while Sodom and Gomorrah were wiped out because there were not ten righteous people in the cities. We have frequently noted how God seems to hate the churches, hurling his thunder-bolts at them, and sparing the saloons at their side, which should be offensive to any God.

All were saddened because of the late destruction of life and property in Calabria by an earthquake. Official reports to the Vatican from the bishops of the dioceses most afflicted, bring the mournful information the number of churches destroyed, or seriously damaged by that terrible act of God is 300, including seven cathedrals. Every church and every cathedral is reputed in church literature the dwelling place of God. Is he dissatisfied with those structures? Are they lacking in grandeur to meet his approbation? Or do they represent "tainted money" wrenched with unfeeling hands from the industrious toiler, at the bidding of priests, pretendedly to save their souls from purgatorial fires? Wherein are they different, save in greater magnificence, than olden heathen temples, wherein the worshipers of Jupiter assembled to pay their devotions to that pagan divinity?

The Better Way.

The daily papers bring the news that the women of Philadelphia are going to fast and pray on election day, for the success of Mayor Weaver and the defeat of the robber gang of politicians and grafters that have dominated the city for years past.

How much better and more effectual it would be, if the women might cast their votes to down the gang.

If the women could reinforce their prayers with their votes, their "effectual fervent prayers" would be vastly more effectual.

Briefly, this subject is worthy the study of all friends of reform.

"Handy Electrical Dictionary." A practical handbook of reference, containing definitions of every used electrical term or phrase. Price $1.

A Question of Science and Ethics.

Leaving out of view the question of the value and efficacy of vaccination as a safeguard against small-pox, is there not something absolutely inhuman and morally debasing and abhorrent in torturing innocent helpless animals for the purpose of assuaging the ills of human beings?

That our readers may fully understand the purport of our question, we will here state the methods employed to secure the vaccine virus, as set forth by an eminent London M. D. He says:

"They take a calf, strap it down to a table, so that it is absolutely helpless. The next thing is to scrub the stomach well, and after having scrubbed it, to shave off all the hair. After the calf has been scrubbed and shaved, it is cut in 100 to 120 places upon the stomach with a lancet, and into these places is rubbed the so-called small-pox virus. After it has been well rubbed into these sores, the poor creature is unstrapped and tied up in a stable, with its head to the wall, so that it shall not lick itself, for eight days. Some of you know what you have suffered from a single pustule on your arm. You know the irritation and the inflammation—fancy having 100 or 120 on your stomach with no opportunity of assuaging the torment!

"At the end of eight days the calf is brought back, and once more tied to the table, and in order to get the dirty decomposing matter out, the pustules have to be squeezed. You cannot procure the contents as you can from a child's arm, so the hard sores must be squeezed with iron clamps. Often the tops are cut off and the matter from the scabs scooped out; this filthy exudation is then mixed with glycerine, and used."

Does not this whole transaction strike you as inhuman, disgusting, and morally abhorrent?

And the serious question arises in every thoughtful and sensitive mind: Can that which shocks the finer esthetic feelings and the higher moral sense, be scientifically right?

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

An Encouraging Report of the Condition of Affairs.

The Grand Rapids Spiritualists Society of which Dr. W. O. Knowles is president and Mrs. Lou E. Johnson is secretary, is prospering gradually as the result of faithful and persistent labor in behalf of the cause of truth.

Dr. Edson A. Titus has been serving the society during the month of October, and his services are proving a great benefit to the Society. He lectures every Sunday at 2:30 and 7:30 and the eloquence with which his lectures have been delivered is appreciated by the society at large, and the interest displayed by the outside people will prove a benefit to the society financially and otherwise.

He seems to be possessed of the power of not only attracting people to him with his social nature but his higher spiritual development gives him a foresight over matters in general unusually manifested by the most of speakers. The harmonizing power which he manifests will no doubt, while he is here with us, elevate and place the Spiritualists of Grand Rapids on a higher plane of spirituality.

Having been a minister in the church in his early life has given him a large range of experience along spiritual lines, and with people in general, and his knowledge of the Bible and its spiritual interpretation seems to feed, broaden and spiritualize all who hear him. He seems to draw all the spiritually-minded to him, and the power with which he is surrounded is sensed by all who come in contact with him, and the Grand Rapids Spiritualist Society gives thanks to God and the angel world for his coming among them.

A message circle is held every Friday evening at the different homes, for the benefit of the society, at which Dr. Titus is present and takes part.

The Ladies' Aid is especially a model of business courage and push, working with zeal and method in every department of possible opportunity by which they may increase the fund for the building of the temple which Grand Rapids Spiritualism so much needs.

The general interests of the society are also in a prosperous condition. The Sunday and week-day services are well attended, and the outlook for the season's work is encouraging.

MOTHER DARLING, BROTHER TRUE

Mother darling, Brother true,
What is now this life to you?
You are through with pain and strife,
You are both in spirit life,
You have passed the harbor bar,
Is there aught your joy to mar?
As I sit alone at eve,
Visions fair my fancy weave,
Of your home beyond the tide,
Where your souls in peace abide,
Free from illness, want or pain,
There desires are not in vain.
All you wish for good and true,
In my visions, come to you.
Ah! your presence oft I feel
As on bended knee I kneel,
Praying that my life may run
Usefully till set of sun.
May I ever worthy be
Of the love you bear for me;
May my life down here below,
As I journey to and fro,
Be of use to fellow-man,
Doing all the good I can,
So that when my work is done,
At the setting of life's sun,
I can enter that fair land,
Join your happy, joyous band,
Journey onward by your side,
And in peace and love abide.
Watch and wait, I pray of you,
Mother darling, Brother true.

THE FUTURE LIFE.

Mrs. Lole F. Prior, Who Is Now at Work in Australia, New Zealand, and New South Wales.

Under the auspices of the Victorian Association of Spiritualists an address was given before a limited attendance at the Mechanics' Hall last night by the Rev. Mrs. Lole F. Prior, who for three years has been pastor of the Spiritualistic Church at Seattle, U. S. A. It had been intended that she should speak for only half an hour, and then give a demonstration of the future life, but the lecturess warmed up to her work, and kept going till 9:40 p. m. The demonstration was therefore considerably curtailed.

Dealing with Modern Spiritualism, Mrs. Prior said it was a religion. Many people who knew little or nothing about it preached against it, because they feared it might possibly undermine the corner stone of their orthodox creeds. They villified it not only ignorantly, but possibly maliciously. She simply would ask them to use their brains and think, and not let other people do it for them. If they did think she was perfectly sure they would see the truths that underlay, sustain, support and are building up the religion of the future.

She refuted the ideas that Spiritualism was of the devil; that they denied God; had nothing to do with the Bible, and did away with the saving of the Nazarene. Their great foundation was spiritual communication, just as it was the foundation of every religion. If they took the spiritual communications out of the Bible and destroyed them they would only have a dry husk.

In support of these assertions of spiritual communications the lecturess cited the cases of Buddha, Zoroaster, Confucius, and late examples in Babylonia and Nineveh. Let them read their Bibles intelligently—take off the blindfold and remove the church spectacles, letting no one interpret the Bible for them. Subsequent to the crucifixion of the Nazarene they had cases of communication in St. Cecelia and Joan of Arc. As a religious body they demanded free thought in all religious matter that would draw men together as brethren. If communications had taken place in the past what was there to prevent them taking place to-day? Luther, John and Charles Wesley were cited as later evidences of spiritual communication. In the early infancy of the Methodist Church preachers were really called to do their work.

Dealing with Biblical manifestations, the lecturess referred to the healing of the blind and lame, and said to-day they had magnetic healers who produced remarkable results by the simple laying on of the hands. To-day in the Church of England a society exists for the study of psychical questions, and that great body known as the Anglican Church had come to the recognition of the fact that they must study these things to keep abreast of the times.

They had never heard of a Spiritualist who denied God, and, once a Spiritualist, a Spiritualist always. There was no backsliding. The Spiritualist's God was such a big God that he could not measure him by his own height, breadth and depth. Men measured God according to their own minds—if they were revengeful, God was revengeful; if a man was benevolent his God was like unto him. People accepted the assurances of scientists about their discoveries, but let her say she had heard and seen spirits, and because of their preconceived orthodox ideas they said it was not so. But men were at the back of her the wide world over, and it would not be many years before it was believed in.

It had no pageantry, but simply taught man how to live to benefit his brother man. Some said it was the devil, and wanted nothing to do with it. Why? Because the world had been taught to fear death. They taught how to live so as to never fear death; but as they expected death, to turn their faces towards it, and pass through the open door between this and the spent life as intelligently and clear-minded as possible. As they lived here, they would find their life on the spirit plane.

People believed they did not believe in the Nazarene. As a divinely good man, a wonderful teacher and reformer, as one who had gone before and shown them the way, so did they believe in the Nazarene; but she could not say they believed in Him as the only divine one. They believed in His divinity and the God-principle in Him. He did not teach ceremony or ritual but taught "I and My Father are one, and ye are My brethren."

The lecturess related how in America 58 years ago a 12-year old girl had discovered spirit knocks, and people next saw and heard spirits, and in 58 years they had increased from a family of five to a family of five millions. This had been achieved without shedding a single drop of blood—let them compare it with the history of the orthodox religion. Spiritualism had spanned the chasm between science and religion. It demonstrated that if a man died he does live again, and it led men to lead nobler, better and truer lives.

In the brief interval remaining, Mrs. Prior gave demonstrations of the future life. In front of two ladies in the hall she saw two spirits—an old man and a young man. The latter had died from chest troubles.

Again there was a little girl who died in infancy from croup or diphtheria, and a fourth spirit arose dripping with water—a fourth relative had been drowned. The two younger male cases were described by the ladies as correct.

To Mr. J. Bannister, Sr., the lecturess described a spirit, and said she saw in his coat a bunch of clove-pinks. It was in England, and it was his mother—they were her favorite flowers. Mr. Bannister could not recollect. Continuing, the lady said his father was telling her of his movements. When 14 he went on a short journey, and when 16 went on a journey and stayed away. Mr. Bannister said the latter portion of the statement was correct, but when an infant sister Mary was mentioned he could not recall her. Mrs. Prior persisted, and he admitted amidst laughter "that there was one before he was born, but he did not know her." The lecturess said this sister was speaking to him, and said that had she lived she would have been called Mary.

Mr. Herbert could not place John, one of the five spirit forms who led him in the things he undertook; and near the lady alongside him the spirit form seen by the demonstrator was of an elderly woman, who had a Bible, and wore half-mits on her hands. There was a picture of the person in existence. The lady said it was probably an aunt, of whom she believed she had a photograph.

Another lady remembered the spirit of a relative who was killed in a machinery accident; and was also the recipient of love from Maggie, to whom she was kind before consumption carried her away.

A message from Alice discovered a medium by that name in the hall. A well-known gentleman said he could not understand the special significance of the years 1875 and 1889, given to the lecturess. A female relative, however, remembered an uncle in Glasgow to whom a communication would bring news of missing papers that meant money.

The meeting closed with a brief prayer to the Infinite One.—Geelong Advertiser.

UPHOLDS IMMORTALITY THEORY.

Dr. O. O. Burgess of This City Gives the Medico-Legal Society Food for Thought.

New York, October 18.—The positive assertion that the theory of immortality is susceptible of proof was made to-night by Dr. O. O. Burgess, a San Francisco scientist, at the opening of the fall meeting of the Medico-Legal Society at the Waldorf-Astoria. Dr. Burgess read to an audience of noted physicians a paper on "Demonstrative Proof of Immortality," and drew upon the demonstrations of Spiritualists for his material. He declared that the Heubner spiritualistic demonstration, which he has watched closely, is not a fraud, and that the reports of communication with the tenants of the after-world are true, thus pointing to an existence after death.

The paper was read to closely attentive listeners, and give them much food for discussion. The sincerity of Burgess and his standing in the profession guaranteed him a respectful hearing.

"The Electrical Action of the Organs of the Human Body" was the title of a paper read by Dr. E. J. Fraser, also of San Francisco.

SPIRITS OF ANCESTORS.

Japan Owes Its Success to Their Benign Influence.

The mikado October 16, issued an imperial rescript announcing the conclusion of peace with Russia and explaining why peace was made. The rescript asserts that Japan's arms have achieved a glorious success and that the position of the empire has been strengthened after twenty months of war.

The emperor admonishes the Japanese people against vainglorious pride, and urges them to take up the avocations of peace in order to maintain the prosperity of the country.

The text of the emperor's rescript is as follows:

"We have always deemed it a fundamental principle of our international policy to maintain peace in the east and thus assure the security of our empire, and the promotion of this high object therefore has been our constant aim; but last year, for reasons dictated by the necessity of self-preservation, we unfortunately were forced into hostilities with Russia.

"Since the war began our army and navy have made adequate provision for home defense and military preparations within the empire itself, and have withstood hardships of all kinds during their campaigns abroad, and thus have achieved a glorious success. Our civil officials, in concord with our diet, have diligently performed their duties in furtherance of our will.

"All measures for the prosecution of the war and for the administration of domestic and foreign affairs have been properly taken, as the exigencies of the situation demanded. Religion Defined and Applied.

A Masterly and Philosophical Analysis of the Subject, By Prof. J. S. Loveland.

As municipalities in various places have imposed licenses upon Spiritualist mediums, some mediums have refused to secure license on the ground that Spiritualism is one phase of religion, and that mediumship is a manifestation or mode of religious activity. For this refusal to obtain license some have been arrested and fined as violators of a supposed legitimate law.

Since the Constitution of the United States guarantees complete religious liberty to every person, the crucial point to be settled in the decision of these cases consists in answering the following questions. Is Spiritualism religion? Hence is mediumship a manifestation of religion.

To settle this question there must be a correct and exhaustive definition of the word religion. It is a somewhat singular fact that our churches are continually using the word, and yet it is found but twice in the New Testament. Jesus never used it. Paul used it once when he declared that he lived after "the straightest sect of our religion"; which is the Jewish. James uses it once and gives a free definition. He says: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep himself unspotted from the world." If James be authority, religion is service to humanity and keeping a moral character. In other words it is conduct and character, opinions being entirely eschewed. According to Paul the Pharisees were a religious sect, but they had doctrines and a vast mass of ceremonial observances. At the present time we have a great number of systems which are termed religious, and it is assumed there is a true religion and many false ones. If this position be granted, it would still be a fact that our constitution guarantees protection to the false system of religion as absolutely as to the true, for it makes no distinction. It makes no definition of the term religion, but leaves that to the professors themselves. No one of the many assumed systems of religious teaching has any right to impose its definition upon community as authoritative. The Brahmin, Buddhist, Jew, Mohammedan and Christian are all protected by our constitution. But there are most essential differences in these systems; for instance, the vast majority of Christians worship Jesus Christ as God. He is the second person of the triune Godhead. The Jew and the Mohammedan reject this with horror, for to them Christians are the greatest idolators, worshiping a mere man as the Supreme Deity. There is hardly any pretense that Christianity does not teach religion, and while Catholic and Protestant are bitterly opposed to each other, yet both claim to be Christian.

The question, What is religion? becomes more and more important in view of these, and other analogous facts which are not here presented. A correct definition must cover all these cases, or else we shall be compelled to say that only one of them is religion and all the rest mere pretenses. A true definition will cover all these cases and all others where the claim of religion is put forth. The definition is this: Religion is the mental and emotional attitude of intelligent beings toward the invisible. This definition makes all men religious. But they are divided into two classes, positive and negative. The positive class affirm that the invisible is more real than the visible and that man will live on in the invisible future as conscious as in the visible present. The attitude of the negative class is that the present life is all, and that the invisible future is a perfect blank so far as any continued consciousness after physical death is concerned. Death to them ends all of conscious, sensual life. No one can fail to see, that based upon this fundamental definition of religion, there may be an infinite diversity of ideas and practices, depending upon time, place, and evolution. There will be the monotheism of certain phases, the polytheism of some, the tritheism or trinitarianism of others, and atheism and pantheism of still others; while ancestor worship will embrace hundreds of millions more. When we come to the observances of rites and ceremonies, the variations are absolutely innumerable, and are from the most absurd to the most revolting and barbarous. But all these are systems of religion.

This definition being true, Spiritualism is religion, and Spiritualists are religious people. They are also positive religionists, for they affirm the most positive conviction of continued conscious existence. They go as far as the Apostle Paul and say, "We know" that if this physical body be dissolved we have a "spiritual body" which will live on through the ages of the future. Hence, they are the most positive of any class of religionists to be found.

So far as public manifestations are concerned, the Spiritualists have no elaborate forms. They are comparatively simple. The circle, platform lecture, and message giving are the principal phases. The lecturers are normal, impressional, and trance speakers. The circle was the primal place where mediumistic manifestations were first given, and messages from the departed are given in the circle, from the platform, and in private readings. There are two purposes in all manifestation of the different systems of religion: 1, The edification of its adherents; and 2, The conversion of outsiders. Spiritualists follow the common practice; they work for the enjoyment of their own religious belief and to convert others to their mode of thinking. The most potent method for the conversion of unbelievers are the tests given in private readings, at the circles, and on the platform. This inauguration of giving tests and messages was for the express purpose of convincing the skeptical masses. It was not commenced with any thought or purpose of commercialism, but it soon became so much in demand that it took all the time and energies of the acting mediums. The question then arose, how could they live? Since time and energy were consumed, the medium must be remunerated or quit the work. The real medium like Paul declares: "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel," for to him it is a matter of conscience, the imperative demand of duty, because he holds the gates between the invisible future and the visible present.

This makes him the called minister of the positive religion. The Spiritualists accept and recognize him as such, and he proceeds to do his duty, imposing a charge for his labor as a recompense and means to live. Whereupon, because he is performing his duty according to his religious belief as set forth in his article of faith and receiving compensation for time and service in the best way he knows, the municipality of Los Angeles arrests him for not paying a license.

The Spiritualists' organization being in the initial stage of formation, is obliged to leave many things to local and individual management. In many ways the practice of the old church is followed, whose ministers are paid—supported—and that support is furnished in different ways. For baptisms, confirmations, marriages, masses, etc., direct payment is made. Collections are made, tithes imposed, and subscriptions taken. But no attempt is made to compel these priests and preachers to take out a license. Why not?

The Spiritualists authorize their ministers to do their work and leave them to adopt various methods for support, thus they follow, in part, the same methods practiced by ministers of other systems of religion. The clergyman contracts with a church for his services at so many hundred or thousand dollars a year. Surely this is business, for a contract means business in the financial sense. The Spiritualist minister stipulates that each attendant pay a dime at the door, a specified sum at the circle and for a private reading. Is this more of business than the priest taking pay for masses, etc? The object in both cases is to secure support to the means by which religion can be kept before the people. The objection offered to this is that the Spiritualist minister, the medium, gives advice about secular matters, tells where lost things may be found, and sometimes foretells the future. Very well, the priest in the confessional gives advice and direction as to secular matters; and the sermons of the clergy abound with discussion of secular and business affairs. Is there any great question affecting the welfare of the people financially, socially or morally, that the clergy do not discuss? Then why should not the medium minister? Do they tell where lost things may be found? Very well, so did the great prophet Samuel. Was it not part of his business? And did he not take a recompense therefor? But the Los Angeles municipality would term him a fortune-teller, then arrest and fine him unless he took out a license.

But the crowning sin of mediums seems to be foretelling the future. Is there anything more absolutely demonstrated than the fact of prophecy? That a most wonderful prediction was given to a company of utter skeptics in the early period of the French Revolution is doubted by no one familiar with history. When prophecy comes it is like an overwhelming wave, for it sweeps everything from the consciousness but itself and then gives itself utterance. Sometimes it comes in a dream, as in the case of the Empress of Japan, when the wonderful success of the Japanese navy was foretold.

In accepting recompense for religious rites and observances the Spiritualists are in accord with all forms of religious service through all the ages. Hence, to segregate Spiritualists from other religionists, and mediums from other ministers, and to seek to reduce their religion to a level with fortune-telling and juggling, and to place duly authorized and reputable mediumistic Spiritualist ministers on the plane of cheats and frauds is an act of the grossest injustice. It is a flagrant violation of the principle of the Declaration of Independence, and an overturning of our constitutional guarantee of protection for one's religious rights.

Foregoing a legitimate criticism of our license system, there seems but one reason for a license law; namely, a method to raise means to carry on government. In this case all forms of legitimate business should contribute in proportion to the profits realized. Mediums would not object to license on that ground, if ministers of other systems of religious teaching are required to do the same, but their contributions would then be infinitesimal in amount.

The true medium cannot afford to be licensed, as this would be an acknowledgment that he is not engaged in a religious work, that the authority which chartered the Spiritualist organization acted illegally and that Spiritualists have not the same right in the liberty of conscience respecting their methods of teaching and worship as those who differ from them in their religious belief.

Every American citizen should be proud that the religious liberty earned by the founders of our government has made a lasting impression upon the whole of earth's inhabitants which will grow and expand until a universal freedom of conscience shall open the doorway for loosening the bonds that have held human minds in slavery to ignorant superstition and letting the redeeming light of scientific knowledge into the darkness of transmitted ignorance.

LIFE AND DEATH.

A little blindness when 'tis needed most;
A little kindness in a troublous time;
A little waiting at a wayside post;
A little lie when truth were half a crime.

A little anger that we should have quelled;
A little bitterness that writes its tale;
A little word unsaid—too long withheld;
A little courage when we nearly fail.

A little meeting of the lips of love;
A little sorrow, and an hour to weep;
A little holding of the hands of friends;
"A little folding of the hands in sleep."

THE PESSIMIST.

Behold the soured pessimist,
With frown he goes around;
He never sees the smiling sun,
He gazes on the ground;
The only skies his eyes e'er greet
Are in the puddles at his feet.

Though flowers bloom along the way
Their grace he never heeds,
He searches out with acid eye
The rank, forbidding weeds;
The dainty rose he spurns and scorns
And only finds the bitter thorns.

He never hears the ringing laugh,
But listens for the sighs;
He always wears a veil of mist
Before his gloomy eyes;
The way he goes is full of gloom,
He's always looking to the tomb.

Behold the gloomy pessimist,
He's gladdest when he's sad,
And if you give these words a twist
He's saddest when he's glad.

MINISTERING SPIRITS.

To What Extent Are Ministering Spirits and Teachers Responsible for the Guidance of Human Lives?

A Lecture by W. J. Colville, Before the First Association of Spiritualists of Washington, D. C.

The subject for our lecture this evening is, "To what extent are ministering spirits and teachers responsible for the guidance of human lives?" While you may hold the lecturer responsible for the method of treatment, you must hold the president of the congregation responsible for the subject, for it was at Mr. Woods' kind invitation that that particular subject was announced for this evening.

When we speak of "ministering spirits and teachers" we are using language entirely above criticism. We may object and we have a right to object to the word "control," for no human being should be dominated or coerced by any other; but, however much objection may be taken to the word "control," and to all kindred terms, no objection can be maintained, if it ever be offered, when the words "guides, directors, teachers and ministers" shall be employed. "They are all ministering spirits sent forth to minister to heirs of salvation." These are the great words which have sounded down the ages and which to-day are a challenge to humanity seeking for further spiritual enlightenment.

Inspiration and Illumination.

When it is understood that spiritual light, that spiritual life, that spiritual illumination belongs to all humanity alike, that it is the property of no special age or of no particular people, we must consider inspiration and illumination as vastly different from the possession and exercise of certain limited spiritual gifts. Not every one is clairvoyant or clairaudient, not every one is mediumistic or psychical or sensitive in the modern sense of the term, and yet it has very often been declared, and not wrongfully, that every one is mediumistic or sensitive more or less, meaning that no one is altogether void of sensitiveness or of sensibility.

Occasionally we might meet with someone so far removed from what is now denominated a psychical condition that we might compare it with someone who was color blind, or deaf, or at least with someone who hears very imperfectly. But while there are instances here and there where people are so marvelously obtuse that their obtuseness is a matter for general comment, on the other hand there are some few so highly gifted that their genius calls for universal comment, and the great majority of people—the rank and file of humanity—stand somewhere between the extreme of sensibility and the extreme of insensibility.

But even though we be insensible to spiritual guidance, even though we may not be aware of spiritual teachers we are not deprived of that teaching or the ministration of the immortal gods; we are only unconscious or unaware of it. Many people are greatly enlightened during their sleep, yet they know not whence their enlightenment comes. They arise in the morning with knowledge they did not possess at bedtime the night before—they awake re-enforced and reinvigorated with renewed ability to cope with the difficulties which may beset them during the coming day, but know not how they know, nor whence they receive this spiritual reinforcement. They have been spending their nights in contact with spiritual instructors; they have been, to a degree at least, educated during slumber, and instead of sleep being spent in idleness the eight hours out of the twenty-four which people on the average pass in repose may be the time most fruitful in the results that it brings forth in human enlargement of vision. Instead, therefore, of feeling that the time we are asleep is time wasted, instead of allowing ourselves to believe that our education is interrupted and that if we were never called upon to sleep we might be much more enlightened than we now are, let us realize that we are always under the direction, always blessed with the guidance of those ministering angels, those spiritual teachers who are the elder brothers and elder sisters in the human family.

The Idea of God.

The idea of God stands out beyond all other concepts, unique in its sublimity. We have just received from London a recent copy of that admirable weekly paper, "Light," devoted to the consideration of all mystical and spiritual subjects according to its title, and we find in the editorial columns of the number dated September 23, that the discussion of two views of Deity is now in the mind of the writer and in the mind of those who contribute to the correspondence columns of our worthy English cotemporary. These two views of God are only the two old conceptions, one that God transcends all, and the other that God is immanent in all; that God is sovereign over all; that God abides in all and that we are all recipients, partakers of the one divine life.

The idea of one God stands forth unique, sublime, unparalleled; that God is one who has no second, that Deity is absolute, is the contention of all enlightened philosophers and ever has been, not only from the days of Plato who said "God geometrizes;" not only from the days of the author of the nineteenth Psalm who says, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork;" not only from the days of the Egyptians who had realized their god-concept long before the time of the Israelitish exodus, but from the very remotest days of history or tradition every mention of the root idea is of one supreme being, one infinite eternal intelligence.

But God is called "God of Gods," "lord of lords," "king of kings." That language would have been meaningless if those who have written or spoken it had no idea of many gods and many lords and many kings. How could we use the expression "Lord above lords, God above gods, king above kings," if we did not first realize that there were many lords, gods and kings? So the word Elohim in Hebrew, and many other words are constantly employed to suggest the thought of the many divine messengers, the many appointed spiritual leaders who are the guardians of planets and the rulers of planetary systems.

No more can a world make itself than this Masonic Temple could build itself. No more could man come into existence without a spiritual cause than there can be the material effect known as a cup and saucer without an intelligence to devise it and to manufacture it. There cannot come into the world a single individual without a divine purpose, and there are only two reasonable theories concerning the origin of man. One is that man is sent into the world by Deity; the other is that man comes into the world of his own accord. One is that the soul is created by God, and the other is that the soul is self-existent and is an eternal finite entity. One is that every human being has voluntarily come here to live, in order to bring forth in expression that which is involved within the soul, and the other is that the soul itself is commissioned by the Most High to realize that in itself it has all possibilities of divine expression.

The Soul Like God.

Now, if God creates the soul, then the soul must be like unto the God who creates it. If the soul is sent into the world to fulfill a divine mission, then that soul is appointed to do the very work which it is now fulfilling. Does not this conception raise our thoughts, elevate our ideas, ennoble our conceptions, and remove once and for all every vestige of lingering pessimism from our philosophic system whatever that may be. I have come into the world; I have not dropped into the world accidentally; I have descended; I have not fallen; I have come down the ladder; I have not lost my balance and tumbled; I have walked down, and I am here to-day because my soul is seeking to manifest its inner powers and is here in an intelligently designed workshop, school and laboratory.

I care not which aspect of the great many-sided truth is insisted upon, whether I think of myself as God's creation or whether I think of myself as living forever as a spiritual entity and being here now of my own volition; I am here for a definite purpose, I am here in the fulfilment of destiny, I am here to master circumstances, to control fate, to rise superior to environment, to demonstrate the truth penned by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, "There is nothing we cannot overcome," and "Behind parents and grand-parents stands the great eternal Will."

All these gods and lords and kings mentioned in sacred story, all the mystic characters we meet in mythological treatises, every one belongs to the great family of intelligent entities to which we also belong—they are intimately related to us. How often the western world to-day struggles with the Oriental problem of Nirvana—how many who are studying Vedanta philosophy are endeavoring to translate Sanscrit into intelligent English and wish to know precisely what the Oriental thought means when it identifies rest not with unconsciousness but with super-consciousness.

The Doctrine of Nirvana.

The doctrine of Nirvana is so exceedingly simple when reduced to its ultimate that it need not perplex even the wayfaring man though he is illiterate. Suppose all of us constituted a congregation of full workers, of co-operators, the spirit of competition thoroughly expelled or never introduced, and every one of us said "I have a place in the universal temple—I am a living stone helping to constitute it, I am a member." There is no spiritual temple, there is no house of God apart from the intelligent entities which compose it, for every soul is a living stone within this mighty edifice.

But some are in the roof, some are in the floor, some in one wall and some in another, some may be in a window, some in a chandelier, some may be at an altar, some close to the entrance; but no matter where they are the temple of God is holy through and through and all God's handiwork. Just as in the orchestra and in choir one musician, instrumentalist or singer, is not necessarily above or below another. Let one play the first violin and another play the second violin, in talking we should speak of first and second but we should not be speaking about superior and inferior, for those two might be equally good musicians and one might be quite as necessary to the rendition of a symphony as the other.

So we say in a choir that one voice is higher than another or lower than another; but we do not mean that the soprano or treble is any higher in a spiritual sense than the contralto or bass. We do not mean because one is in the chorus and another is a soloist that one is not equal to another or that one is any more necessary to the unity of the whole than the other.

And so we are here on earth to-day; some of us are in high stations and some in low places. Here in Washington there are a few senators, a few congressmen; one man is President. One man is King of England, one man is Czar of Russia, one man is Mikado of Japan, one man Shah of Persia, and though all these different individuals may be called kings, rulers, and exalted representatives, yet they shall die like all other men, for princes rise and fall like peasants. We are all members one of another. If I meet a King I shall say, "Brother;' if I meet a Queen I shall say "Sister." I have no objection to meeting the gods and goddesses of Egypt and Persia. I am willing to meet the millions of gods and goddesses of India.

Our Guides and Teachers.

An eminent man, widely traveled, who is doing a great work in Los Angeles, said last spring in the course of an interesting address, that he had been told that in Hindu mythology there are three hundred and sixty-five million divinities—a million divinities for every day in the year. If that is the doctrine of certain Hindus, what does it mean but that there are three hundred and sixty-five million souls who are now so far advanced that they can be guides and teachers, directors, overseers and instructors of others. Now, how do we get our overseers, our foremen and forewomen? A boy in a New York hotel is running an elevator, he is told by the proprietor of that hotel that in a few years, if he does his work well and deserves promotion, he may become a head clerk. Now when that boy has become a head clerk there will be a great many boys under him in a large hotel. He may direct the affairs of many; he may be, a few years hence, a head waiter and there may be a large number of men serving under him, yet to-day he may be one of the bell-boys subject to everybody's call. The clerk behind the counter tells him to go and he has to run, but he can look forward to the time when he will be a director.

All the way from a city hotel to the very heavens bending over the earth our guides and teachers may be found. You ask, who are our guides, who are our teachers, who are the ministering angels that come to-day as they came in days of old? Men and women in human form manifesting with human attributes.

A lady said recently: "Some years ago I wrote in my Bible sarcastically, 'What, angels eat and drink!' and I thought I was very smart when I thus criticised the biblical text." But she added: "During the past several years I have had spiritual revelations which have led me to feel it is perfectly reasonable that they should eat and drink, and now I am older and wiser and I am no longer sarcastic." Is not that the history of intellectual progress? Do we not find a number of people turning up their noses, so to speak, at anything like spiritual revelations—skeptics, agnostics, materialists, they do not believe in ghosts; they do not believe in "spooks." They are perfectly justified in not believing in ghosts and spooks; they are perfectly justified in not believing in "galvanized astral shells," and in paying no attention to a fanciful story of a wraith, of a vision of some imagined visitor from the unseen world when their nerves were unduly excited. But when we take an intelligent view of spiritual revelations we do not go to churchyards to have interviews with angels, nor do we consider that our spirit friends usually awake us in the night in ghastly presence as well as in ghostly raiment and frighten us out of our sleep by coming back to this world and returning only to scare us.

I wish we could once for all drop the phrases "spirit return," "spirits coming back," "spirit control" and all the other misleading phrases and statements which have caused a great many people to look with contempt upon what would otherwise have won their respect.

A great many people use language which is utterly unscientific and go on using it when they know better because they have grown accustomed to the old erroneous forms of speech. We are always determined in our ministrations to use only terms which we are prepared to stand by. "Do you believe in spirit control?" says some one. I may believe in it because it may exist, and if it exists I have no right to disbelieve in it. If one says, "Do you desire spiritual communion?" I reply, Yes, I do, I know that spiritual communion is a mighty truth. I do not speak falteringly or hesitatingly on the question of spirit communion. I know it to be true, to be desirable and profitable and I rejoice in it. I rejoice in the certainty of it. There is no incertitude in such a tone, and there is no mentally uncertain ring when that doctrine is promulgated by those who know.

Meaning of Spirit Communion.

What do we mean when we speak of "spirit communion?" People say, "Have you a God?" Why not? "Have you teachers?" Why not? We are not ashamed of going to a university to study under a professor. We are not ashamed to read a valuable book by a scientific author and of being profited by its contents. We are not ashamed of sitting at the feet of some great maestro and learning music, painting, or sculpturing. Why should we then be ashamed, here, of meeting with some master who has passed on to the unseen world? Why may he not be still what he was while on earth—a music master there even as he was here? Why not be still the teacher as well as the artist? Why not be still the writer, the inspired and inspiring litterateur? Why say "gone" and "dead" of Sir Walter Scott, Charles Dickens or Thackeray? Why say no more poems from Longfellow and Browning, and no more essays from Emerson? Why say that the great patriarchs and prophets of olden time have merely left legacies and testaments behind them? I abhor the word "testament" whether with old or new, as a prefix; let us use "testimony;" older and younger testimony, but not "last will and testament."

When God spoke to the world in days of old, God did not say, "this is my last message to humanity, now good-by, I am going to leave you." When God sent angels to enlighten the generations gone by these angels didn't come with a heavenly mission to earth saying, "these are the last utterances which will ever come down to earth from celestial spheres." There is not a record in any bible, ancient or modern, which has led any intelligent student to believe or to infer that in any special age or country all divine revelation was confined to revelations which are very old to-day though they were very new two or three thousand years ago. They were followed by other revelations and by angelic ministrations which have extended down to the present time. I have received many letters in which the writers have said they had received more help by one statement through my lips than by anything else, and that was the statement, "It is always now and it is always here."

We preach the Now-Here and the Here-Now philosophy. Are we not now in the universe; are we not now in eternity? Some people think they are going into eternity when they die; that when they drop their mortal bodies they will pass out of time into eternity, but there never was any time outside eternity; Eternity always holds poor little Time in its embrace and time, no matter how long, even though it be an incalculable age, can never be a competitor with eternity. How can we get out of space into infinity, and say when we die we are no longer in space but that after death we are in infinity. We are in the infinite now, in the eternal now. What we call time on this planet is not the time of Mercury, Mars, Jupiter or Saturn, and what we call space is not only what we limit by our own three dimensional peculiarities. The fourth dimension in space is a very scholarly term which people bandy about and enjoy repeating the phrase. The fourth dimension in space only means that there is another great realm peopled with spiritual intelligences knowing more, seeing more, hearing more, feeling more and doing more than we comprehend.

The Mission of the Soul.

"Now if every soul has a mission in expression to fulfil shall not that soul be left alone," says one, "to work out its own salvation? Shall we not depend entirely upon the Over-Soul, upon Deity, and have nothing whatever to do with any angelic intermediaries?" Why so? when every soul on earth ushered into mortal existence comes through the gateway of motherhood. Surely we do not wish to abolish the mother—only to perfect her for her function. We do not wish to abolish the mother love that is tender and sweet and kind—the mother ministry which makes it possible for the child to grow and thrive. In the course of years, or months, or perhaps weeks, some ministry may be overcome, surpassed, superseded, because no longer needed; but as long as the child needs the mother, so long the mother needs the child; they need each other; but there comes a time when the human mother must wean her babe, as there comes a time when the mother eagle will let the little eaglets fly and no longer bear them upon her widely outspread pinions. The mother instinct tells her when all her little family are strong enough to fly alone. The very instinct that made her carry them, now makes her send them out to ferret for themselves. Is not that the order of universal nature, of the cat with kittens, the dog with puppies; even as with the human mother and the human child; is not that the order in every school of life? Graduate from school, say good-bye to the old school house, do honor to your alma mater; graduate from the university, leave the college walls behind you and go out into the world to practice your trade or profession, but always think kindly of the university which has harbored and helped you.

But will you never go back to college as a teacher? Have you said good-bye forever to dear old Heidelberg, to Harvard, to Yale, to Oxford, to Cambridge; will you never see the old university again? Have you young men and women who are now engaged in the teacher's admirable profession said to the school houses, "I will never see you again?" The bright young girl graduates, the bright young men who are graduating from the same schools in these days with their sisters, proving that co-education annihilates all false belief in the superiority of one sex and the inferiority of the other—as these young men and young women return to those very schools may they not go there again as teachers where they were once learners? May not the children of the next generation be learning from the pupils of the generation before? And so with angels, ministers, messengers; and archangels, ministers and messengers of higher grade.

Archangels and Angels.

Archangel means a spiritual architect. An architect is one who plans, designs. Angels are builders; archangels are architects. It takes more intelligence to be an architect than to be simply a workman employed in the raising of some majestic pile. How many men you can find—good men and true—who are masons. How many carpenters, glaziers; how many work together and build a great Masonic temple, yet one architect with his complete design is sufficient to be the captain, yea to be the general and direct the employment of them all. In the spiritual spheres there is a parental soul, an archangel having charge, a supervising guardian. We have all our spiritual guardians and directors and when everything is well planned on earth the words apply: "See thou make all things below according to the pattern which is shown to thee from above."

We should not depend slavishly upon our teachers. We go to school and acknowledge our teachers, but we study for ourselves. Our teachers do us very little good if we are idlers. A teacher does not say, "My dear child, I am paid by Uncle Sam to do your lessons for you," or "I am drawing my salary from the Government in order to work out examples for you upon the slate, so you need not have the trouble of working them out yourself." The teacher says, "Look at me, see how I work out the example." One teacher goes to the blackboard and figures away with his piece of chalk; another goes to the piano and plays a selection admirably, perfectly; another teacher says, "This is the way to pronounce this word;" or "This is the correct translation of this passage from a foreign tongue." And just as wise teachers on earth know their vocation and keep their place, as they are our guardians, guides and directors, so are our spirit friends who have ascended.

Character of Communications.

Your friends are not necessarily wiser than you because they passed into the spirit world a few years ago. You get communications from your uncles, aunts, cousins, sisters, brothers, business partners, employes, employers and intimate friends. You get communications from many who were well known to you on earth and they make themselves manifest with all their idiosyncrasies. Professor Hyslop declares in his new book entitled "Science and a Future Life"—which is well worth studying and reading many times over—that the communications which a majority of people get from the spirit world are exactly such communications as people get who ring their friends up over the telephone. "Hello, is that you?" calls Prof. James to Prof. Hyslop, when one is at Harvard and the other at Columbia—one in Boston, the other in New York. "Fine weather we are having. Very warm for the season; it's very hot in Washington for October." That's a sample message from one learned professor to another.

"Well, how's your wife and the children? Give my love to Harry; tell Julia that when she comes to the city we shall be very glad to entertain her." That's from one learned professor to another. These men have been college chums, intimate friends, and that's the kind of conversation they carry on over the telephone wire. Is it disgraceful or demeaning? Certainly not; but it is commonplace.

Professor Hyslop has found that when people have passed over into the next state of existence they do very much the same and indulge very often in the same ordinary trivial friendly intercourse. Why, that's brother Jack, and that's sister Mary. Certainly. You don't expect them to stand upon their dignity, and you don't expect your college chum to deliver a classic oration when he comes to make a friendly call upon you. You don't expect your mother is going to appear before you with stilted phrases as though she had composed an essay which she is going to read before a very critical audience. When we enter into communion with our spirit friends do we not love and prize the tender tones, the old familiar accents of affection. We do not expect an oration every time an aunt comes to visit us; we do not expect to hear majestic sentences dealing with profound philosophical subjects, every time an uncle comes, even though he is an astronomer, a geologist or a biologist in some great university.

So when we hold communion with the bulk of our spirit friends, it is with Tom, Dick and Harry, because they are our friends, our brothers, our companions of a few years ago; and it is from your brother Tom, and from your son Harry, and from your uncle George that you want to hear, and you are a great deal more satisfied to hear from your beloved friend than from some distinguished philosopher whom you may have read about when you were at school, but of whom you would say, "I never knew him individually, and while I admire him greatly I have never felt the same intimate regard that I felt for my bosom friend who was my confidant in all times of trouble and sorrow as well as in hours of exaltation and delight."

Higher Intelligences.

There are higher intelligences; there is a Socrates and a Sophocles in the spirit world. There is even a great spiritual guardian who may be to us a messiah or master; there are those on still higher planes who occasionally make themselves clearly known to us; they guide, direct, counsel, warn, exhort, but they never coerce. Emma Hardinge Britten used to say her guides always recommended what course she should pursue but never insisted on her following it. The daemon of the eminent Greek Socrates was, according to his biographers, both the voice of the soul within and the speech of a guardian angel.

A guardian angel never says, "You shall," but only, "I advise you." The guardian angel never says, "You must, or I will make you," for the guardian angel never hypnotizes or mesmerizes, never attempts to make himself an operator and you a subject. Your guardian angel never says "I have more power than you, and as the stronger force will always prevail; as I command you to do you will have to do, because I say so." That is not the tone of a guardian angel who says, "Beloved children, I advise you to follow this counsel, for my experience has taught me that it is a path of wisdom, and wisdom's ways alone are ways of pleasantness and peace."

The guardian angel truly says, "If you follow this road blessing will attend you; joy and success will crown your endeavor." The guardian angel warns you from the path beset with snares and pitfalls, but always adds, "My child, you must do as you please; you must give the deciding vote; it is for you to say whether you will follow as I direct or not." If the guardian angel did not thus warn and guide, direct and exhort, but attempted to coerce, he would be no longer a teacher and minister but simply a mesmerist, a hypnotist, controlling his subject by the exercise of greater mental ability.

The Problem of Obsession.

DEAFNESS AND CATARRH CURED

BY NO METHOD UNTIL "ACTINA" WAS DISCOVERED.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The air passages become clogged by catarrhal deposits, stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Until these deposits are removed a cure is impossible. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. Ear drums are worse than useless. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. The vapor current generated in the Actina passes through the Eustachian tubes into the middle ear, removing the catarrhal obstructions as it passes through the tubes, and loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, making them respond to the slightest vibration of sound. Actina has never failed to cure ringing noises in the head. We have known people troubled with this distressing symptom for years to be completely cured in only three weeks' use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case. We give advice free, and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Professor Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease, Free. IMPORTANT WORK.

"Official Register of the National, State and Local Spiritualist Associations of the United States and Canada, With Lyceums, Camp-Meetings and Mediums."

The above is the title of a highly important illustrated work, gotten up with painstaking care, by Mrs. Laura G. Fixen, the efficient vice-president of the Illinois State Spiritualist Association, 1047 Carmen Avenue, Chicago. It contains 100 pages and will prove of great value to those who wish to get information in regard to the different societies located in various parts of the country. It is gotten up in a most beautifully artistic style, and reflects great credit on its compiler. This long needed work will impress the casual observer with the extensive following we have, and the dignity due to the grandest and most important philosophy now before the whole civilized world. It leads off with a magnificent photo-engraving of Mrs. Abby Louise Pettengill, president of the "City of Light" Assembly, Lily Dale, N. Y., who is a prominent factor in the education process now going on in our ranks. This Official Register can be obtained by addressing this office. Price $1.

General Survey.

CONTRIBUTORS.—Each contributor is alone responsible for any assertions or statements he may make. The editor allows this freedom of expression, believing that the cause of truth can be best subserved thereby. Many of the sentiments uttered in an article may be diametrically opposed to his belief, yet that is no reason why they should be suppressed; yet we wish it distinctly understood that our space is inadequate to publish everything that comes to hand, however much we might desire to do so. That must account for the non-appearance of YOUR article.

WRITE PLAINLY.—We would like to impress upon the minds of our correspondents that The Progressive Thinker is set up on a Linotype machine that must make speed equal to about four compositors. That means rapid work and it is essential that all copy, to insure insertion in the paper, all other requirements being favorable, should be written plainly with ink on white paper, or with a typewriter, and only on one side of the paper. Please bear this in mind.

ITEMS.—Bear in mind that items for the General Survey will in all cases be adjusted to the space we have to occupy, and in order to do that they will generally have to be abridged more or less; otherwise many items would be crowded out. Sometimes a thirty-line item is cut down to ten lines, and ten lines to two lines, as occasion may require.

TAKE DUE NOTICE, that all items for this page must be accompanied by the full name and address of the writer. It will not do to say that Secretary or Correspondent writes so and so, without giving the full name and address of the writer. The items of those who do not comply with this request will be cast into the waste basket.

KEEP COPIES of your poems sent to this office, for they will not be returned if we have not space to use them.

THIS GENERAL SURVEY DEPARTMENT IS ONLY INTENDED TO CHRONICLE THE ENGAGEMENTS AND WORK OF SPEAKERS AND MEDIUMS. A REPORT OF WHAT THE VARIOUS SPEAKERS SAY WILL NOT BE PUBLISHED, AS WE HAVE NOT SPACE SUFFICIENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

T. B. Grunwald, pastor, writes favorably of the Church of the Soul, Louisville, Ky. The hall has been filled with eager listeners, and much good is being done.

The Independent Church of Truth, corner 47th street and Grand Boulevard, under the leadership of Georgia Gladys Cooley, is meeting with grand success. The capacity of the hall is taxed each Sunday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. E. D. McCormick of the Cottage Inn, Billings, Mont., were in the city last week.

Mrs. G. C., of Chicago, writes: "Will the members of the Psychic Circle please try to relieve my husband of obsession. He is suffering terribly from this affliction, and any help the circle can give him will be greatly appreciated by his family. We are members of the circle and wish to be remembered by all the friends."

Mrs. Johnson writes from Three Rivers, Mich., warning the people against the deceptive "spirit" manifestations that come forth in the seances held by a trumpet medium by the name of Varnell.

Mrs. Cora L. V. Richmond will address Mrs. Mary Hill's meeting, 320 Flournoy street, Sunday evening, Nov. 5 1905.

Mrs. T. Barry writes: "Miss Emma Gibbs, of Grand Rapids, a new worker in the field as public speaker, but one whose whole soul is in the work, filled the Spiritualist rostrum very satisfactorily in Battle Creek, October 1, 8 and 15."

Henry Smith writes: "The Spiritualistic Church of the Students of Nature service was held as usual, Van Buren Opera House, corner Madison street and California avenue. Last Sunday evening the pastor delivered a very interesting address to a large audience. Dr. L. C. Koehler, the assistant pastor, followed with teachings of the Master. We all felt repaid for listening to the messages which were demonstrated by the pastor, and brought sunshine to all."

Mrs. Kirchner writes: "Our beautiful philosophy was demonstrated thoroughly on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 22, at the Rising Sun Mission, by Mrs. M. Schumacher. Her tests were given with only one thought in view and that was, consoling messages from the loved ones on the spirit side of life. Sister Thompson also gave some very interesting messages. In the evening a large audience greeted Dr. J. McFarland, who electrified his hearers. He was heartily applauded. Sisters Weaver and Andrews gave grand demonstrations of the return of spirit. We cordially invite all to attend our services every Sunday afternoon at 3; evening at 8, at Star Lodge Hall, 378 So. Western avenue. Our speaker for Sunday afternoon, Nov. 5, will be Dr. J. M. Peebles, of Battle Creek, Mich., and in the evening, which will be medium's night, a short talk by our president, followed by spirit messages by six of our well-known mediums."

A Kokomo (Ind.) special says: "The police department of the city building is haunted. Strange noises of nights are heard in the 'bum room' department. Generally the sounds are those of some one walking about, but investigation fails to reveal any one in the flesh. Locking doors is no relief from the nocturnal visitors, who seem to delight in making their presence known when everything is deathly quiet. Now and then a board will creak as if disturbed from its place by the foot of an intruder, but when the desk sergeant goes to see if some one has entered by a rear window or back door, he has his pains for nothing and gazes upon empty air. The bluecoats are not afraid but they have creepy feelings sometimes when these noises start. Believers in spirits say the disturbances are caused by some former member of the force who is attracted to the place."

Mrs. Sarah A. King writes: "I am a subscriber to The Progressive Thinker. I don't let anything so good pass by. Thanks to the angel world for what you and friends are doing. I want to be enrolled on the Psychic Circle book. I will send in the names of some of my friends."

When writing for this paper use a pen or typewriter.

We go to press early Monday morning, hence communications intended for that current issue should reach this office not later than the previous Saturday morning. Bear this in mind.

ALWAYS GIVE YOUR FULL NAME AND ADDRESS WHEN SENDING NOTICES AND COMMUNICATIONS FOR PUBLICATION, OTHERWISE THEY WILL FIND THEIR WAY TO THE WASTE BASKET.

Mrs. I. M. Powderly writes: "There will be a Halloween social at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Hurlbut, 6320 Wentworth avenue, on Tuesday evening, Oct. 31, under the auspices of the Englewood Spiritual Union. Come out and have a good time and bring your friends; also come to the Sunday services held at the new G. A. R. hall, 6236 Princeton avenue, just north of 63rd street, at 2:30 and 7:30 p. m."

C. W. Bennett writes: "The Progressive Thinker, No. 830, is grand, and though I know little of Spiritualism as compared with what I wish to know, I like the stand you have taken. I want nothing spurious, and if we cannot have the genuine I want nothing to do with Spiritualism. Your condemnation of fakes has the true ring, and every honest reader of your paper will voice the same sentiment; the others can be spared."

G. H. Brooks has secured rooms at 823 Cass street, Milwaukee, Wis. All lotters and telegrams should be sent to that number. He will respond to calls for funerals and mid-week meetings. His meetings in Milwaukee are well attended.

Thomas Kizer writes from Decatur, Ill.: "On Saturday last, after a stay of two weeks with us, Mr. Donlevy and Mr. Fraser and Mrs. Bell and daughter, all of Chicago, left our city for Centralia. They came here independently, renting a hall two Sunday evenings. Mr. Fraser and Mrs. Bell lectured, following with tests that were satisfactory in almost every instance. They gave two test seances at my home each week, and assisted in our mid-week meetings, and we feel that their stay among us will result in great benefit to our society. We entertained Mrs. Bell and daughter while here, and the gentlemen a portion of the time, and wife and I can't remember of any persons remaining with us the same length of time that we became so attached to as these people. They go southward for the benefit of the health of the daughter Myrtle, expecting to return in the spring."

Mrs. A. Sexsmith writes: "The meeting of the Golden Rule Spiritualist Society on Sunday, Oct. 22, was well attended, both afternoon and evening. In the afternoon we were interested by short talks by different ones present; then forming a circle there were messages given to all by different mediums. In the evening a large audience gathered to listen to our veteran brother and co-worker, James E. Coe, who gave reminiscences of the work and growth of Spiritualism since its commencement. Mrs. Frankie Cole sang that beautiful song, 'I Know There Are Flowers in Heaven.' Messages were given by Mrs. A. Sexsmith to many strangers. Our speaker for Sunday, November 5, will be Mrs. Nora Hill. Everyone welcome each Sunday afternoon and evening, at O'Donnell's College Building, Paulina street, between Washington Blvd. and Park avenue. Open door. Don't forget our series of dances the second and fourth Saturdays of each month. Tickets 25 cents."

Wm. Hassmann writes: "The regular Sunday service of the North Star Spiritual Union at its hall, No. 1546 Milwaukee avenue, was very interesting. Organ concert by Silas Arthur Hunt, inspirational musician. Lecture by Rev. Dr. P. M. Esser. The closest attention was paid by the audience. The test medium, Mrs. Johanna Rennau, gave remarkable proof of spirit return. The sick were treated free by Dr. P. M. Esser, a special attraction which is given in evidence of spiritual facts at every meeting. The Progressive Thinker, the true Spiritualists' friend, was at hand and given out. On Thursday, Oct. 26, two members of this church will be united in holy marriage, by Mr. Esser, at the home of Mrs. Rennau, 1800 North Ashland avenue. Let us hope that the blessings of the holy spirit may come down in enduring rays of sunshine and happiness upon them."

E. R. Fielding writes from Washington, D. C.: "Prof. W. J. Colville is lecturing to good audiences in the Capitol City, under the auspices of the First Association of Spiritualists. He lectures in the Masonic Temple, Sundays, at 11 and 7:45. He also holds classes in different parts of the city. His lectures are free from dogmatism. Anyone wishing a larger unfoldment and a higher expression will do well to attend his lectures. The student is led from lesson to lesson by an enchanting story. Every step one feels on awakening or an unfolding influence. Every lesson is uplifting. He gives his last lecture at Mrs. Dr. Butts', Saturday, October 28. The Auxiliary holds meetings every Thursday evening at Mr. F. A. Woods'. Something new and interesting at every meeting. The Temple League has rented a hall in the Pythian Temple. Meetings are held every Sunday evening, with good music and speaking. Mrs. A. M. Zoller follows with tests."

Correspondent writes: "Dr. Beverly's parlors were filled to overflowing by friends of Madame Lora Holton, in honor of her birthday. A special musical program had been prepared and was participated in by a large number of young people, the Madame giving two fine vocal solos of her own composition. Prominent psychics were present and all received readings. Refreshments were served, and several nice presents were presented Madame Holton, among them a beautiful light blue and white beaded chain. She responded by appropriate remarks, and all returned to their homes feeling happier and brighter for the few hours spent in friendly intercourse. That many happy returns would come to this faithful and talented worker was the wish of all."

A subscriber writes: "Dr. B. F. Austin, the indefatigable and fearless exponent of Spiritualism, will lecture at Grand Boulevard Hall, corner 47th street and Grand Boulevard, Tuesday evening, Oct. 31, at 8 o'clock. Do not fail to come and bring all your friends to hear this speaker who for a quarter of a century was a Methodist minister and leader among the orthodox people of Canada but who bravely entered the ranks of Spiritualism after investigating its truth and is now one of our most ardent workers. The Doctor will be in the city but the one evening and let every Spiritualist and liberal thinker appoint themselves a committee of one to make this evening a grand and glorious one for our worthy brother. He will be ably assisted by Chicago's sweet soloist, Miss Inez Light, and Georgia Gladys Cooley, who will be the message bearer of the evening."

L. H. Warren writes: "Allow me to congratulate you for the bold stand you have taken against frauds and trickery practiced by so many pretending mediums. I have been a thorough investigator for over 50 years with my wife and others, wife being a good medium, so you see it is hard for bogus mediums to deceive us. I met with Mr. Winans some ten years ago at Clinton camp, Iowa, and many were telling what a wonderful medium he was, but the most wonderful part of it to me was the ignorance of the people to allow a man to impose upon them, and do it so easily."

The Sunflower Club gave its second tea party, Tuesday, Oct. 24, and was well patronized. These gatherings are becoming great social events. Many salesladies from the leading stores of the city plan their lunch hour on these days, that they may enjoy a cup of tea and receive a reading. The gentlemen in attendance are gaining in number each time. The next tea party will be held Nov. 14. The ladies will meet early for the transaction of business and be ready to serve the friends at two o'clock. Tuesday evening, Nov. 7, for the club, Mrs. Henrietta L. Lichtig will entertain at her home, No. 4709 Indiana avenue, third flat, at an Orange Social. The price of admission is one orange. Many will be anxious to carry home the prize oranges, which will be imported for this occasion. Every minute of the evening will be interesting. Don't miss it. Bring your friends. The young people are especially invited.

Maurgurite Mac writes: "Quite a number attended the social at Mrs. Burland's. It was exclusively a ladies' entertainment, as there was not a gentleman present. All had a good time. Psychics present gave readings and messages: Mrs. McCleary, Mrs. Davenport, Madam LaBell, and Mrs. Maggie Henry; and Violet, Mrs. Burland's little Indian control always exerts herself to give messages and entertain so all can have a pleasant time. For refreshments we had coffee and pumpkin pie."

Mrs. J. Wheelock writes from Long Beach, Cal.: "I have no thought of losing a single issue of your most valuable paper; almost any issue is several times worth the price of the paper, and as long as I can spare the dollar, I will have the grand and uplifting thoughts and lessons this wonderful paper ever spreads out before me.

J. I. Hollingsworth writes: "Having read with interest the article of Mr. Channing Severance of Los Angeles, Cal., in The Progressive Thinker of October 14, I wish to say that I fully agree with him. And further, while there is a great deal of humbuggery in this world, yet there is more humbuggery in religion than in all other humbugs put together, and not one particle of evidence can be produced to show that all the religions of the world combined ever kept one single soul out of hell or sent one to heaven. And why the leaders of the National Association will insist upon conducting it as a religious organization, I cannot conceive. Spiritualism being a science pure and simple, as much so as astronomy, telegraphing or telephoning; the latter science it approaches nearest to, and if Spiritualism had been placed before the people and conducted as such, it would have spread equally as rapid. And if the leaders of the National Association insist on conducting it as a religious organization, instead of scientific, then I am in favor of forming an association separate and distinct, to be conducted as a science only, and for the express purpose of educating and enlightening the people in spiritual science, and will be glad to hear from any one having similar views."

Mrs. Maggie Henry writes: "At old 77, Spiritual Mission Chapel, we certainly had one of the finest meetings I ever attended. The home was full of intellectual people. At the close of the scripture lesson, our speaker, F. M. Stoller, took his subject from the audience, and they frequently interrupted him with applause. We also had the pleasure of listening to a few remarks from Dr. Charles Arthur Burdett of New York, professor of psychology. He was followed by messages by Madame Lucile DeLoux; then Mr. Stoller gave the best psychometric readings I ever heard. Our musician was accompanied on the piano by Prof. La Londe, on the violin. Strangers in the city and skeptics are especially invited to attend our meetings to open promptly at 8 p. m. every Sunday."

Eva L. Stewart writes: "The Hyde Park Occult Society enjoyed a pleasant evening on Sunday last. Miss Warren gave us a beautiful talk under control. She afterwards sang, 'Beckoning Hands.' She has a fine delivery and a sweet voice. Mrs. Ruth A. Coombs gave fine readings from articles placed on the table, followed by Mr. E. Dierkes; after which Mr. T. D. Jones finished them, and also gave spirit messages. On November 5, we have engaged Mrs. E. J. Hanson to speak for us. She is well known and always draws good houses and gives a fine lecture. We have another social dance on Wednesday, Nov. 1. Admission 25 cents including refreshments."

Dr. D. S. Hager, a prominent physician and a profound thinker along spiritual lines, writes: "It is with pleasure that I congratulate your special department, in 'Questions and Answers,' in reply to Mrs. McC. This really shows that thinking men are molding the course of Spiritualism. I also note in Moses Hull's letter, 'No so-called tests wanted.' If there is anything disgusting to intelligent persons who would gladly become units in your beautiful cause, it is the fact that so many 'Profs.', 'pseudo doctors,' 'Mrs. Drs,' etc., etc., are allowed to prey upon an honest investigating public. 'He that entereth by any other way' than a thorough study and foundation, is a thief and a robber. Every Spiritualist ought to thoroughly understand the laws of health and the cause of disease, but they must study to know this. The future religion will be a practical one, and how to live here and now will enter largely in that religion."

Sarah Stone Rockhill writes from Alliance, Ohio: "I will tell you of our discouraging conditions, and see if through the General Survey aid will come to us. We have, as many of the lecturers know, a nice church building, free of rent or debt, but our president moved to another place, and some of the workers are from age and ill health incapacitated to shoulder the responsibility of keeping up meetings for the winter, and no younger ones lack the enthusiasm that insures success, so it looks as if we would have a closed house in the future indefinitely; so I am wondering if there may not be some person who, knowing of the conditions, will come and carry on the good work independently, or with our co-operation. I see several have opened meetings in other cities, and under proper conditions the effort might prove very successful here. Nothing bogus or fraudulent need respond, as the trustees reserve the right to close the doors at once upon any dishonest or fraudulent presentation of Spiritualism. If lecturers passing here could give us a date and time to announce, and take the collection, we may still have some signs of life."

Mrs. Frances F. Spangler writes: "The Pittsburg (Kansas) Spiritualist Society is very much alive. Mr. Walser lectured last Sunday evening, and Mrs. Walser rendered one of her beautiful solos. We intend to hold the attention of the public, and give them a pleasing variety all winter. We expect to alternate between Prof. S. A. Weltmer, Mrs. Sara C. Scovell, Mr. and Mrs. Walser, and our local talent, and possibly some one from among the workers from a distance. Please do not place us in the list as dead, wounded, or missing, but ready to answer to the roll call."

Dr. G. B. Warne lectured in Rockford, Ill., last Sunday.

J. W. Ring of Galveston, Texas, who lately illuminated Chicago with his presence, has several engagements in Missouri. He went last week from St. Louis to Springfield.

Wm. F. Nye, a prominent Spiritualist of New Bedford, Mass., lately visited Chicago.

WHEELING, W. VA.

Mrs. Nellie S. Baade at Work for the Cause.

Yesterday, I organized the Spiritual Progressive Lyceum, with the following officers: President, Frederic Schaub; secretary, Miss Etta Brunhaus; treasurer, C. P. Richardson; librarian, Lucy Schaub; pianist, Mrs. M. D. Bryan. In the evening I addressed a large and appreciative audience. This society at Wheeling has efficient officers and earnest workers.

Mr. Brunhaus, the president, is a whole-souled man, presides with great dignity at each meeting and is a power for good. With his genial presence upon the rostrum one could scarcely fail, and his good wife is also an earnest worker, a power behind the throne to move things along. In fact, the officers and members are all doing their best to advance our cause, and with the array of talent to follow us, such as Mrs. Carrie Curran and Mr. Geo. H. Brooks, we bespeak for this society a spiritual success. I am told that the Rev. Way of this city, who is the regular pastor of this society, was instrumental in organizing the same, but at present is speaking for the spiritual society in Washington, Pa. He is a genial, pleasant, and spiritual-minded man, and is doing his best for the good of the cause. He has many friends here and is respected by all.

I shall remain here until January 1, then proceed to other fields of labor. I find The Progressive Thinker is the favorite spiritual paper and the enlarged edition was a great surprise to all, and this last edition is certainly worth a years subscription to your valuable paper.

The fearlessness with which you attack the fraudulent element in our ranks is highly commendable, and every true medium and Spiritualist should return you their best thanks.

Some time ago some one sent an article to your paper saying no one should be considered a good test medium unless they could get the name of every spirit in full. That may be so, but in all of my years of mediumship and earnest investigation I have never found one honest medium that at all times could do this. Of course some get more names than others, and often that is about all they do get; while others see, describe, and give tests of spirit presence that are undeniable. So let no one in their egotism presume to say just what shall come before the medium, or in just what manner the message must be given. This eternal clamoring for what cannot at all times be given, has been the means of bringing our cause in disrepute, and without doubt some who started out honest, earnest and true, when they found more was demanded of them than they could honestly give, have resorted to fraud and deception, lowering their spiritual standard and deceiving the people.

But come and let us reason together. Make the best possible conditions for our spirit friends to approach us and with a clean and pure body, a fit temple for our own spirit, and with the kindest thoughts for all, make harmonious conditions, then we shall have far better results than at the present time. For instance as an illustration, four years ago in a large city where I was speaking for a spiritual society, one of the officers came to me for a reading. He was an old gentleman, faultlessly attired, well spoken, etc., but while in conversation with him I was obliged to keep as far away from him as possible, he was so thoroughly saturated with the poisonous nicotine as to make me deathly sick whenever he approached me, and then he wondered why I, and no medium he had ever met, could not see and describe his spirit friends, when the fact was not one of them could come into his aura. So do not let us be so uncharitable as to blame the medium or spirit, but let us look within and see if our lives are such as to attract the higher and better influences, when we all do this we shall receive far more satisfactory results; and with the aid of the dear Progressive Thinker, that reaches thousands of investigators every week of the year our cause will become purified and the truth go marching on.

CHARLES J. BARNES.

An Ohio Spiritualist Certifies to His Mediumship.

To the Editor:—Since Charles J. Barnes, the true and tried trumpet medium, recently came to Canton, the writer has had the pleasure of attending several of his seances which were indeed interesting, and in which the proof of continued life, spirit return and communion were proven without the shadow of a doubt, and among the manyconvincing proofs I would like to make mention of a few.

Proof No. 1.—An old acquaintance of Mr. Benjamin Lint, now of Canton, but formerly of Missouri, by the name of William Hauch, who also formerly lived in Missouri, but who claims to have passed to the spirit side from that state several years ago, came to Mr. Lint, calling his full name, and when Lint asked who was speaking, he replied in a clear and distinct tone of voice, "Billy Hauch, from Missouri." This surprised Mr. Lint, since he was not aware of the fact of his old friend's passing to the other side of life. Spirit Hauch also said: "To prove to you that I am Billy Hauch, I will relate an incident that happened when we lived in Missouri. I was driving a span of mules attached to a heavily-loaded wagon and the wagon got stuck in a mud-hole, and while in that predicament you drove along, got out, hitched your team to the wagon and through the two teams the wagon was pulled out." Mr. Lint remembers well the incident and verifies the truthfulness of the statement.

No. 2.—Dr. House, a physician of the homeopathy school, who passed to the spirit side of life from Canton a few years ago, came to Mr. Benjamin Reed, an old friend and patron of the Doctor while practicing medicine in Canton. To prove to Mr. Reed, who was attending his first seance, therefore quite skeptical, that it was really he, Dr. House, who spoke to him, he, House, related somewhat of an amusing incident that took place a few months before his death. Said he, "Don't you remember coming to my office, saying you were sick and when I told you what ailed you, you said, 'Doctor, give me something mild.' This was too much for Reed and he had to acknowledge the truth of the statement. A night or so thereafter, a spirit giving the name of William Reed and claiming to be an uncle of Mr. Benjamin Reed, came to the seance expecting, he claimed, that Mr. Benjamin Reed would be there as he had promised, and seeing he had failed to come, was disappointed. Mr. Benjamin Reed claims that no one in Ohio, outside of himself, knew he had an uncle by that name. Another clincher.

No. 3.—The deceased husband of a lady who sat in the circle next to the writer, came to his wife, calling her by her given name, and then gave his name in full, and for the purpose of asking his widowed wife's forgiveness for acts of his before passing to the spirit side. After being told by her that she forgave him, and assuring him that she still loved him, his reply was: "Katie, you have no idea how much good that does me. I can now progress better and faster." After this conversation had been apparently finished, I said to the spirit, "Henry, do you know who I am?" His reply was, "Yes, it's Ed Kidd; I'm glad to see you." I will here state that I have known him for a number of years and it was his custom when addressing me to call me Ed.

Brother William Davis, whose life for many years was devoted to Spiritualism and the grand truths therein contained, also known as the old boatman, he having had charge of the boats at Lake Brady for a number of years, and was known by thousands of Lake Brady patrons, came directing his remarks to the writer, also saying, "I want you, Brother Kidd, to deliver a message for me to Judge Underhill (Judge J. W. Underhill to whom he referred lives in Canton)." The message: "He and I promised each other that the one first to pass over should return and send a message to the one left on earth, and as I have come over first, am here to make my promise good." Brother William Davis passed out and into the spirit world last winter, in Cleveland, Ohio.

There were many other convincing tests and messages given, but will ask you for no more space in which to record them. In conclusion I wish to say to all truth-seekers that I cheerfully recommend Brother Charles J. Barnes, through whose mediumship the truth and proof of continued life will be satisfactorily demonstrated. His home address is 642 N. Lake street, Warsaw, Ind. E. R. KIDD.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE,

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

John Whitworth: Q. Why is it that at times men confess to crimes they have not committed, and take on themselves the crimes for which others have been convicted?

A. This question is called out by what is almost like an epidemic of confessions. A letter confessing to a murder committed in Ohio, has recently been widely published, being written just before its author committed suicide it so states. As a man was duly tried and executed for the crime, this confession, if true is a deplorable reflection on the justice of law, but all connected with the affair are positive the real criminal suffered, and it becomes obligatory to conclude that this confession was made by one innocent of the deed.

The guilt of the famous Biddle brothers was indisputable, yet now a person confesses that he alone committed the crime.

The most remarkable part of the confession is the strict adherence to details, and the addition of ingenuous evidence.

Volumes might be filled with instances, and when these confessions have come from innocent persons before the conviction of the guilty, they have caused a miscarriage of justice, and instances are recorded where the innocent confessor has been executed or imprisoned.

There may be two explanations, both plausible, and perhaps both required by the different facts.

By constantly brooding over a crime, susceptible person may become hypnotized, and an implicit believer in any circumstantial thus received. This is a cognate aberration often seen in forms of insanity.

A hypnotizer would have no difficulty in making his subject believe himself guilty of a given crime.

There is no reason why a spirit should not influence such a person, making him think as desired. Hence many of these freak confessions may be at the instigation of over-influencing spirits. Each case requires a separate and independent investigation and study.

H. H.: Q. What has become of Emma Goldman, and what was her early life and later influence?

A. She was born in Russia, but at an early age was taken to Germany by her parents. Even then her soul was fired with anarchy and her favorite words were "Kill the oppressors!" She came to this county in 1886 and after the hanging of the anarchists in Chicago in 1887 she started out boldly advocating riot. She went to New York and mingled with the lowest and most criminal, taking one of the latter for a husband. On his leaving her she added free love to her creed. She became more malignant in her speech against God, religion and government, and became intimately attached to John Most.

An early lover of hers, inflamed by her teachings shot Henry C. Frick, and Czolgosz asserted that he was led by her burning words to assassinate McKinley. In 1893, in a speech in Union Square, New York, she advised those who could not find employment to take up arms and demand bread, and if refused, to help themselves. For this she was sentenced to the penitentiary for one year, which time she served.

She has preached anarchy all her life, and been one of the most active and most venomous of nihilists. The day after the attempt to kill King Humbert, she gave a burning speech to the group at Paterson, N. J.

She is pre-eminently the queen of anarchists and one of the most dangerous. Even the extreme nihilists, although working for the destruction of all governing powers and persons, are possessed of a self-devotion, making the sacrifice of themselves for the benefit of others in the future, that sheds a halo over their careers and give a rude justification of their crimes. But Emma Goldman seems possessed with one desire—vengeance on the oppressors. She incites to destruction, assassination, conflagration, riot, the breaking down of all barriers, as a tiger would destroy for the pure pleasure of destroying. She is now in New York, ostensibly occupied as a hair-dresser, but biding opportunity.

Wm. H. Curran: Q. Would not Woman's Suffrage give us God in the Constitution, and are we ready for such a calamity. If two-thirds of the church members are women, and three-fourths of them would cast their ballots for the candidate their dear pastor desired elected, and nine-tenths of the pastors in favor of God in the Constitution; it seems to me that it certainly would be a dangerous step in that direction.

A. This objection to Woman's Suffrage has been often urged by freethinkers who saw in it a menace to liberty of thought. If it were possible to give woman the ballot at once, to allow her to vote at the next presidential election, the consequences might be disastrous, as is always the case when a large number of people are given the ballot before prepared to exercise the privilege with discretion. It was forced on the southern slave to his own detriment and that of the whites, and has ever since been a perplexing problem, the solution of which will be the task of the future.

There are over 2,000,000 Catholic voters in this country, and suffrage granted to women would add 2,000,000 more to this vote. As it is, by casting the vote of the church solid with the party which promises most, the hierarchy is able to carry the election of such candidates as it pleases. With twice the strength, it is readily seen what a menace it would be to the liberty of the people. This Catholic element is proverbially ignorant, and the women are several degrees more incapable and superstitious, than the men, and hence they will require a longer time to be safe citizens—safe to have the ballot placed in their hands.

There can be no doubt that the time will come when women will stand equal to man at the polls. Before that time she should be educated out of superstition. What is more—what is most vital—is there should be a test of qualifications to vote. Simply being a man, or woman, should not be all that is required. To vote should demand a knowledge of our government, and the duties of citizenship. It should demand ability to read, write and speak the English language.

With safeguards there would be no danger. As it is now, however, the greatest menace to the national life, is the mass of voting superstition and ignorance. The assimilating power of the nation has reached its limits, and the time threatens when the anarchy imported by capital in its greed, may turn on its master.

Let us not forget the fact that there is danger in giving the ballot to men.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charmingly Interesting Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

New Light Cottage.

My Dear Martha:—I was so surprised when I got your letter, which John carried in his pocket so long, telling of your engagement to Clifton Lee, that I had not gotten over it when I got your letter saying the engagement was broken. I feel more like congratulating you over the breaking than of the making of the engagement. This may sound cruel but it is not, and I feel sure you will be glad some day not far away. You are a dear brave girl and I am proud of you.

When I get where I know I am a Spiritualist I shall call myself one and people may say what they please. I will never sneak, for I despise a coward. If anyone says anything bad about me, I will live in such a way as to prove it a lie. When I get Spiritualism—if I ever do—I will live it and make my life testify to the fact that it is grand, beautiful, pure, and uplifting in every sense of the word. For some reason I believe it is all of that, but if I find that it is not I will have nothing to do with it. I suppose I got these ideas from John—I wish you could be acquainted with him—for he always tells me not to be governed by circumstances and conditions but to rise superior to them and compel them to serve my purpose. He says we ought to be glad of everything however hard that tests our strength of character and reveals to us our real selves.

How I wish you were here with us! Things are getting real interesting. You see I have got our house named. Perhaps the light may not be new to everyone but it is new to us. About a week after I wrote last, Aunt Jane—mother's aunt—came to make us a long visit. Aunt Jane is a very decided character. She says she has a very strong will, but John says he thinks her won't is a good deal stronger than her will. It may be bad grammar but it expresses the truth. The first day Aunt Jane was here she went all over the house and at the supper table she asked us why we did not fix up the big chamber over the kitchen. She said she thought it the pleasantest room in the house and if we were willing she would like it for her room. Mother looked at John with a helpless, appealing look that was pitiful.

After a moment's hesitation John said, "Aunt Jane, do you believe in ghosts?"

"Probably," she said scornfully, "do I look as if I do?"

We could not truthfully say we thought she did, but John went on bravely: "I am glad you do not, for now you will not be afraid to help us solve a mystery."

"What mystery?" said Aunt Jane, sternly.

"The mystery of the baby, for one thing," said John. "Every night between eleven and one o'clock we have heard an infant wailing in the room you want for yours, and several times we have heard footsteps as of a woman walking to and fro."

"Cats or rats," said Aunt Jane in a decided tone.

"Did you ever know a cat or a rat to wail like an infant?" asked John.

Aunt Jane sniffed. "One can hear anything in the night," she said, "and to think the noise you have heard is made by cats is the only sensible conclusion."

"Different persons have different ideas of what constitutes sense, I have observed," answered John quietly.

There was a moment's silence and then Aunt Jane said to John, "You said 'the mystery of the baby, for one thing,' now I want to know what the other thing is."

"You will have to answer that question for her, mother," said John, and excusing himself, he left the house. Mother turned pale and stammered, "I—I can't."

Aunt Jane looked at her in surprise, and then as mother remained silent, said irritably, "Helen Weston, what ails you? Do speak out! One would think that you were trying to conceal a crime or that all of you have been struck with idiocy. No one but a lunatic or a fool believes in ghosts."

This started my Weston blood, as mother says, and I turned to Aunt Jane and said with some warmth, "I suppose if you should hear, see and feel a ghost, you would not believe in it?"

"Certainly not, for there is no such a thing," was the prompt reply.

"What would you think if you saw some one standing before you and then saw the person vanish instantly?"

Aunt Jane looked at me severely and said, "Marah Weston, I shall never see anything of the sort, for it is only those who believe in such things, those who are not emancipated from the slavery of superstition, who see such things."

"If you feel in this way about it, it will be better not to tell you what we have seen, but I am surprised to find you do not believe the Bible."

Aunt Jane looked up in great surprise and said quickly, "I disbelieve the Bible? Why, Marah Weston, I believe every word of it!"

"Then," said I calmly, "how do you get along with the ghosts in it? From beginning to end the Bible is full of accounts of spiritual beings who appeared and vanished. One moment they were, the next they were not, and if you can believe those things I should think you ought to be able to believe what mother and I tell you."

Aunt Jane looked at mother. "Helen Weston, what does all this mean?" she said. "Have you all been deluded by some modern witch calling herself a spirit medium? Speak!" she said excitedly; "surely I have a right to expect an answer from my own sister's child."

Mother arose to the occasion and said, calmly, "Do not be alarmed; we have never had anything to do with a spirit medium so far as I know, but we have had some strange experiences since we came into this house. The room over the kitchen which you propose to occupy we call the Shadow Room. When we came here the one door leading to it was fastened by nails at top and bottom. I thought it very strange and so did John when he came to open the door for me. We went in and found everything just as you found it to-day. We examined the furniture which is very good, as perhaps you noticed. I went to the bureau and opened the drawers and found them all empty but the bottom drawer, in which, to my surprise, I found an infant's wardrobe all complete. As I was lifting the articles out one by one I became conscious of a darkness suddenly enveloping me. The sun was pouring into the room through the curtainless west windows, lighting every corner when we entered, and I was startled by the sudden darkness. I turned to speak to John and saw him standing before the big mirror on the south wall. I called his name but he did not answer, so I went to him and saw a strange sight. John's and my own reflection in the glass and at John's right hand the shadowy form of a woman with an infant in her arms. I was startled and looked about me but all I saw out of the usual was the shadow of a woman upon the opposite wall. I clutched John's arm. 'What does it mean?' I said. The room seemed real dark, but the sun still shone brightly through the windows.

"'I am blessed if I know,' said John. 'I guess the air is bad.' He went across the room to the west windows, and the shadow woman glided along with him. He threw up the windows and the room filled with the pure out-door air, but the shadows still remained. I felt as if in an ice-house, and shivered. 'I want to go down stairs; I cannot stand this any longer,' I said.

"John never said a word, but he took my hand and we came down stairs together, and I have not been in the room since, but Marah has, several times."

"And seen a shadow everytime, probably," said Aunt Jane sarcastically. "Well, I will tell you this: To-morrow I shall clean and air that room thoroughly, shadows or no shadows! The idea of being routed by a shadow!" and she leaned back in her chair and laughed heartily.

"He laughs best who laughs last," said I, and I went down to the barn where I found John feeding the calves and I sat down on a box and watched him. We have some beautiful calves and they have just the cutest little faces. I can't see how anybody can kill such dear little things—it gives me the creeps just to think of it. According to the Bible God made a wardrobe for Mr. and Mrs. Adam out of the skins of animals, so I suppose he first killed the animals. What a God! Just think of it! I will never, to please anybody, either worship or pretend to worship a God that is no higher than my highest ideal of manhood. John always makes me think of a king of the ideal sort. It makes no difference what he is doing nor how poorly he is dressed, he looks noble and the work he is doing assumes an exaltedness when he is doing it. He always seems to want to do everything he has to do. I have not got to that point yet, but I am going to. After the calves were fed I invited John to sit beside me on the grain bin and then I asked him if he knew anything about Spiritualism?

"Not as much as I intend to," was the answer.

"John," I said, "do tell me all you know about it."

"I know we are confronted by a mystery here in this house, and I think that only through Spiritualism will we ever find a solution. I know that Spiritualism, as one of its advocates, Mrs. Drury of Steelville, proclaims it, is just what I want, what my soul has long been hungering for, the grandest, most beautiful, helpful, ennobling religion the world has ever known. Last week when I went to Steelville on business, I went to hear Mrs. Drury speak and I wish you could have been there with me. I was never so surprised in my life. I expected she was going to offer us something that would suggest the coarse, cheap, tarnished finery of a dirty minstrel show, but it seemed to me when she had finished her remarks that she had gathered the best of everything ever offered to the world under the name of religion, and given it to us under the name of Spiritualism. She is refined and ladylike in her speech and manner and dress, dead in earnest, sympathetic, and kind and respectful when dealing with the opinions of others, and I am determined I will attend her meetings in the future.

"While she was giving the messages she told me a tall man with dark hair and eyes stood beside me and she could see the letters R. W. over my head and she felt impelled to say to me, 'the mystery will be explained to you and a new life opens before you.' The family where I stayed seemed inclined to laugh over the message, but I told them I knew what it meant if no one else did, and the letters R. W. stood for Ripley Wilder, my father's name. They said probably she had been around reading the grave-stones, but they could not explain how she could make any connection between a grave-stone in the far west and me whom she had never seen before. It is strange how some people will believe the most senseless things rather than accept a new truth, or rather a truth that is new to them. It takes more credulity to believe their explanations than to believe what they are trying to explain away."

John says the next time Mrs. Drury comes to Steelville I may go to the meeting with him, and it does not seem to me I can wait for the time to come, but as John says we always do things when we have to. Oh, I am so glad John is my half-brother, seeing he couldn't be a whole one, for he is the best brother a girl ever had!

The next day Aunt Jane went up to Shadow Room and began operations. She declined our help, so we kept away from her and let her have things her own way. About four o'clock she came down looking pale and tired and asked us to go up and look at the room. John had just come in, and so he went up with us. The room looked real clean and nice and all the furniture was arranged differently. The first thing I noticed when I stepped into the room was the shadow of a woman upon the south wall where the mirror had been. Mother noticed it, too, and grabbed my arm tight.

Aunt Jane talked rapidly and acted decidedly nervous. John went over to the mirror and stood for a moment and then said, "Please come here, ladies." When we stood before the mirror we saw our own reflections and the shadowy figure of a woman with an infant in her arms. Mother almost shrieked, "What does it mean, John?"

"Don't be a fool, Helen Weston," snapped Aunt Jane. Then turning to John she said, "If that hemlock tree out there was out of the way, this shadow business would be stopped, for I have noticed when the wind blows the tree, shadows glide along the wall."

John smiled in a peculiar way and we all left the room. A little later the hemlock was lying on the ground. "I hated to cut down the tree," said he, when I went out to see what he was doing, "but those who pray at the shrine of Truth must be willing to sacrifice something upon her altar."

The next morning Aunt Jane came down to breakfast with a burning spot upon either cheek and she looked ill, but she held her head very high and talked and laughed in a way I never knew her to before. Perhaps she deceived herself into thinking she had deceived us, but she did not. After breakfast I noticed a mysterious noise in the shed chamber and went to investigate. I found Aunt Jane thumping the wall between the unfinished shed chamber and the Shadow Room. She started when she saw me looking at her, and said sullenly, "I thought there must be some room connecting with my room, but I find there is not, so I am hunting for a sliding board or something of the sort. I am going to solve the mystery of those shadows if it takes me six months. I don't believe in spirits," and she shut her jaws with grim determination.

"I thought you said the hemlock tree explained the shadows," I said, a little wickedly I am afraid, but she took no notice of me. She had been in her room but a few minutes that night before I heard her calling to me to bring up a light. I found her in the dark. She said her light went out and so had all the matches she had lighted. I set my lamp upon the table but before I got three feet away from it there came a breath of icy air and the light flared up and went out. I hardly noticed it though, for I saw a strange sight which held me fascinated; for some reason I have never felt afraid in this room. What I saw was four human figures, mist-like in appearance and slightly luminous. They moved about the room and one of them held in her arms an infant. As I watched her she glided before the mirror and reflected there. I saw she was a beautiful young girl with fair complexion and dark luminous eyes.

Aunt Jane screamed, "John, for heaven's sake, bring up a light and some matches."

John came quickly but the minute he entered the room the light went out. He struck a whole card of matches one by one and then went down and got his safety lantern and that burned all right. While John was gone Aunt Jane and I looked upon a strange scene. The fair girl sat down in the print-covered rocker and rocked her baby sobbing piteously as she did so. The room appeared dimly lighted by a tallow candle which sat upon a small table which was not in the room—I mean really—and there was an odd-looking little stove in one corner with a fire in it. A tall man with thin white hands bent over the stove, and a large woman with a heavy mass of gray hair, fumbled in the lower drawer of the bureau. Puff after puff of icy air blew over me, but it was a very hot night.

When John came he asked us what we were staring at, and then it came out that Aunt Jane had seen nothing but semi-luminous figures moving about, "which proves," she said, obstinately, "that neither of us saw anything but what our imagination conjured up."

What has happened in the room since then I do not know. She goes to her room every night with a stern white face, and we all admire her courage. To-morrow night we go to hear Mrs. Drury, and I do hope she will tell me some of the things I want to know.

Write just as soon as you can and tell me all about your dear self.

Lovingly yours,

MARAH WESTON.

CARLYLE PETERSILEA.

That Which Man Has Done, Man May, and Can Do.

I wish to relate an anecdote connected with my dearly beloved husband, Carlyle Petersilea. Mr. Petersilea, from early youth, had been in the habit of smoking. He contracted the vile habit, as other boys do, at the age of ten or twelve years.

After being graduated from the Leipzig Conservatory of Music, he purchased a very expensive smoking set of meerschaum; all of the separate pieces bearing the exquisitely carved profile of King Wilhelm.

Petersilea was naturally very proud and pleased with this beautiful smoking set, which he preserved very carefully for many years, up to the time when he became fifty years of age.

During his career as a great piano virtuoso, he was invited to dine with Longfellow, the poet. After dinner, Longfellow proffered him a cigar, saying, "These cigars were one dollar each;" and if my memory serves me, Longfellow himself did not smoke, but kept these cigars, which had been presented to him, for his invited, gifted and honored guests. Then, during the evening, Mr. Petersilea played to Longfellow the pieces of music which Longfellow loved best, Mozart's principally, ending with Beethoven's grandest sonata.

O, how many times he has told me of that visit, and the smoking of that cigar which cost one dollar; but such folly was in his younger life; and now comes the part of my story which interests me most.

Shortly after Mr. Petersilea reached his fiftieth year, he said to me:

"Amelia, what do you think of my leaving off smoking?"

I answered, "Carlyle, dear, I do not know what advice to give you. I greatly fear that, at your age, after smoking for forty years, it might go very hard with you, perhaps make you very ill and weak; consequently, I dare not advise you."

"Well," he replied, "I shall be obliged to leave off smoking when I go to spirit life, unless, indeed, I return as a spirit, and attach myself to some inveterate smoker; thus making him and myself worse than before. The very thought is becoming horrible to me. No; I must gather up my will-power and leave it off now. There is no better time than now; then I shall not carry the vile habit with me when I enter the higher and should-be better life. Besides, I am a spirit now, and as an immortal soul, I will not continue the nasty habit. My darling, the house is scented with it. All your clothes are scented with it, and I well know you abhor tobacco smoke," which was true.

"Well, dear," I said, "I dare not advise you to leave off the habit, but if you do, I will go against your ever taking it up again, with all my might."

"Agreed!" he answered, "and from this moment I shall never smoke the vile weed again."

That evening he presented his beautiful smoking set to a young Prussian, who desired it as a memento, and keepsake, on account of King Wilhelm's portraits; and from that hour until the day of Mr. Petersilea's departure for the higher life he never smoked again.

He had, occasionally, when very weary, after exhaustive playing, taken a glass of good old German lager beer; from that moment he never took another. He also nearly discontinued the use of meat; and would have done so entirely, but living out of town, as we did, he often had to dine at a restaurant, and here he could get little else; and they really were not willing to serve him unless he took the regular dinner course; but I think he ate very little of it.

Now I write this to encourage both young men and old to leave off the vile habit of smoking. No matter how many years you may have had the habit, leave it off—leave it off. It is never too late to mend. I hear young men often say: "Oh, I can't leave off smoking. The habit is too deeply seated."

"You can. You must. Gather up your will forces and stop on the instant, as I did. You will never regret it, but it will be a source of joy and content to you as long as you live on earth, and forever after you have entered the spiritual spheres."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

This department is under the management of

HUDSON TUTTLE.

Address him at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

NOTE—The Questions and Answers have called forth such a host of respondents, that to give all equal hearing compels the answers to be made in the most condensed form, and often clearness is perhaps sacrificed to this forced brevity. Proofs have to be omitted, and the style becomes thereby assertive, which of all things is to be deprecated. Correspondents often weary with waiting for the appearance of their questions and write letters of inquiry. The supply of matter is always several weeks ahead of the space given, and hence there is unavoidable delay. Every one has to wait his time and place, and all are treated with equal favor.

NOTICE.—No attention will be given anonymous letters. Full name and address must be given, or the letters will not be read. If the request be made, the name will not be published. The correspondence of this department has become excessively large, especially letters of inquiry requesting private answers, and while I freely give whatever information I am able, the ordinary courtesy of correspondents is expected. HUDSON TUTTLE.

John Whitworth: Q. Why is it that at times men confess to crimes they have not committed, and take on themselves the crimes for which others have been convicted?

A. This question is called out by what is almost like an epidemic of confessions. A letter confessing to a murder committed in Ohio, has recently been widely published, being written just before its author committed suicide it so states. As a man was duly tried and executed for the crime, this confession, if true is a deplorable reflection on the justice of law, but all connected with the affair are positive the real criminal suffered, and it becomes obligatory to conclude that this confession was made by one innocent of the deed.

The guilt of the famous Biddle brothers was indisputable, yet now a person confesses that he alone committed the crime.

The most remarkable part of the confession is the strict adherence to details, and the addition of ingenuous evidence.

Volumes might be filled with instances, and when these confessions have come from innocent persons before the conviction of the guilty, they have caused a miscarriage of justice, and instances are recorded where the innocent confessor has been executed or imprisoned.

There may be two explanations, both plausible, and perhaps both required by the different facts.

By constantly brooding over a crime, susceptible person may become hypnotized, and an implicit believer in any circumstation thus received. This is a cgnl aberration often seen in forms mattnity.

worlgnetizer would have no difficulty making his subject believe himself guilty of a given crime.

There is no reason why a spirit should not influence such a person, making him think as desired. Hence many of these freak confessions may be at the instigation of over-influencing spirits. Each case requires a separate and independent investigation and study.

H. H.: Q. What has become of Emma Goldman, and what was her early life and later influence?

A. She was born in Russia, but at an early age was taken to Germany by her parents. Even then her soul was fired with anarchy and her favorite words were "Kill the oppressors!" She came to this county in 1886 and after the hanging of the anarchists in Chicago in 1887 she started out boldly advocating riot. She went to New York and mingled with the lowest and most criminal, taking one of the latter for a husband. On his leaving her she added free love to her creed. She became more malignant in her speech against God, religion and government, and became intimately attached to John Most.

An early lover of hers, inflamed by her teachings shot Henry C. Frick, and Czolgosz asserted that he was led by her burning words to assassinate McKinley. In 1893, in a speech in Union Square, New York, she advised those who could not find employment to take up arms and demand bread, and if refused, to help themselves. For this she was sentenced to the penitentiary for one year, which time she served.

She has preached anarchy all her life, and been one of the most active and most venomous of nihilists. The day after the attempt to kill King Humbert, she gave a burning speech to the group at Paterson, N. J.

She is pre-eminently the queen of anarchists and one of the most dangerous. Even the extreme nihilists, although working for the destruction of all governing powers and persons, are possessed of a self-devotion, making the sacrifice of themselves for the benefit of others in the future, that sheds a halo over their careers and give a rude justification of their crimes. But Emma Goldman seems possessed with one desire—vengeance on the oppressors. She incites to destruction, assassination, conflagration, riot, the breaking down of all barriers, as a tiger would destroy for the pure pleasure of destroying. She is now in New York, ostensibly occupied as a hair-dresser, but biding opportunity.

Wm. H. Curran: Q. Would not Woman's Suffrage give us God in the Constitution, and are we ready for such a calamity. If two-thirds of the church members are women, and three-fourths of them would cast their ballots for the candidate their dear pastor desired elected, and nine-tenths of the pastors in favor of God in the Constitution, it seems to me that it certainly would be a dangerous step in that direction.

A. This objection to Woman's Suffrage has been often urged by freethinkers who saw in it a menace to liberty of thought. If it were possible to give woman the ballot at once, to allow her to vote at the next presidential election, the consequences might be disastrous, as is always the case when a large number of people are given the ballot before prepared to exercise the privilege with discretion. It was forced on the southern slave to his own detriment and that of the whites, and has ever since been a perplexing problem, the solution of which will be the task of the future.

There are over 2,000,000 Catholic voters in this country, and suffrage granted to women would add 2,000,000 more to this vote. As it is, by casting the vote of the church solid with the party which promises most, the hierarchy is able to carry the election of such candidates as it pleases. With twice the strength, it is readily seen what a menace it would be to the liberty of the people. This Catholic element is proverbially ignorant, and the women are several degrees more incapable and superstitious, than the men, and hence they will require a longer time to become safe citizens—safe to have the ballot placed in their hands.

There can be no doubt that the time will come when women will stand equal to man at the polls. Before that time she should be educated out of superstition. What is more—what is most vital—is there should be a test of qualifications to vote. Simply being a man, or woman, should not be all that is required. To vote should demand a knowledge of our government, and the duties of citizenship. It should demand ability to read, write and speak the English language.

With safeguards there would be no danger. As it is now, however, the greatest menace to the national life, is the mass of voting superstition and ignorance. The assimilating power of the nation has reached its limits, and the time threatens when the anarchy imported by capital in its greed, may turn on its master.

Let us not forget the fact that there is danger in giving the ballot to men.

The Light Among the Hills.

A Charmingly Interesting Narrative.

Most Beautifully Suggestive is "The Light Among the Hills," by Mrs. I. L. Lewis, of Bethel, Vt. It is a narrative founded on facts alone, and every Spiritualist should read it.

New Light Cottage.

My Dear Martha:—I was so surprised when I got your letter, which John carried in his pocket so long, telling of your engagement to Clifton Lee, that I had not gotten over it when I got your letter saying the engagement was broken. I feel more like congratulating you over the breaking than of the making of the engagement. This may sound cruel but it is not, and I feel sure you will be glad some day not far away. You are a dear brave girl and I am proud of you.

When I get where I know I am a Spiritualist I shall call myself one and people may say what they please. I will never sneak, for I despise a coward. If anyone says anything bad about me, I will live in such a way as to prove it a lie. When I get Spiritualism—if I ever do—I will live it and make my life testify to the fact that it is grand, beautiful, pure, and uplifting in every sense of the word. For some reason I believe it is all of that, but if I find that it is not I will have nothing to do with it. I suppose I got these ideas from John—I wish you could be acquainted with him—for he always tells me not to be governed by circumstances and conditions but to rise superior to them and compel them to serve my purpose. He says we ought to be glad of everything however hard that tests our strength of character and reveals to us our real selves.

How I wish you were here with us! Things are getting real interesting. You see I have got our house named. Perhaps the light may not be new to everyone but it is new to us. About a week after I wrote last, Aunt Jane—mother's aunt—came to make us a long visit. Aunt Jane is a very decided character. She says she has a very strong will, but John says he thinks her won't is a good deal stronger than her will. It may be bad grammar but it expresses the truth. The first day Aunt Jane was here she went all over the house and at the supper table she asked us why we did not fix up the big chamber over the kitchen. She said she thought it the pleasantest room in the house and if we were willing she would like it for her room. Mother looked at John with a helpless, appealing look that was pitiful.

After a moment's hesitation John said, "Aunt Jane, do you believe in ghosts?"

"Probably," she said scornfully, "do I look as if I do?"

We could not truthfully say we thought she did, but John went on bravely: "I am glad you do not, for now you will not be afraid to help us solve a mystery."

"What mystery?" said Aunt Jane, sternly.

"The mystery of the baby, for one thing," said John. "Every night between eleven and one o'clock we have heard an infant wailing in the room you want for yours, and several times we have heard footsteps as of a woman walking to and fro."

"Cats or rats," said Aunt Jane in a decided tone.

"Did you ever know a cat or a rat to wail like an infant?" asked John.

Aunt Jane sniffed. "One can hear anything in the night," she said, "and to think the noise you have heard is made by cats is the only sensible conclusion."

"Different persons have different ideas of what constitutes sense, I have observed," answered John quietly.

There was a moment's silence and then Aunt Jane said to John, "You said 'the mystery of the baby, for one thing,' now I want to know what the other thing is."

"You will have to answer that question for her, mother," said John, and excusing himself, he left the house. Mother turned pale and stammered, "I—I can't."

Aunt Jane looked at her in surprise, and then as mother remained silent, said irritably, "Helen Weston, what ails you? Do speak out! One would think that you were trying to conceal a crime or that all of you have been struck with idiocy. No one but a lunatic or a fool believes in ghosts."

This started my Weston blood, as mother says, and I turned to Aunt Jane and said with some warmth, "I suppose if you should hear, see and feel a ghost, you would not believe in it?"

"Certainly not, for there is no such a thing," was the prompt reply.

"What would you think if you saw some one standing before you and then saw the person vanish instantly?"

Aunt Jane looked at me severely and said, "Marah Weston, I shall never see anything of the sort, for it is only those who believe in such things, those who are not emancipated from the slavery of superstition, who see such things."

"If you feel in this way about it, it will be better not to tell you what we have seen, but I am surprised to find you do not believe the Bible."

Aunt Jane looked up in great surprise and said quickly, "I disbelieve the Bible? Why, Marah Weston, I believe every word of it!"

"Then," said I calmly, "how do you get along with the ghosts in it? From beginning to end the Bible is full of accounts of spiritual beings who appeared and vanished. One moment they were, the next they were not, and if you can believe those things I should think you ought to be able to believe what mother and I tell you."

Aunt Jane looked at mother. "Helen Weston, what does all this mean?" she said. "Have you all been deluded by some modern witch calling herself a spirit medium? Speak!" she said excitedly; "surely I have a right to expect an answer from my own sister's child."

Mother arose to the occasion and said, calmly, "Do not be alarmed; we have never had anything to do with a spirit medium so far as I know, but we have had some strange experiences since we came into this house. The room over the kitchen which you propose to occupy we call the Shadow Room. When we came here the one door leading to it was fastened by nails at top and bottom. I thought it very strange and so did John when he came to open the door for me. We went in and found everything just as you found it to-day. We examined the furniture which is very good, as perhaps you noticed. I went to the bureau and opened the drawers and found them all empty but the bottom drawer, in which, to my surprise, I found an infant's wardrobe all complete. As I was lifting the articles out one by one I became conscious of a darkness suddenly enveloping me. The sun was pouring into the room through the curtainless west windows, lighting every corner when we entered, and I was startled by the sudden darkness. I turned to speak to John and saw him standing before the big mirror on the south wall. I called his name but he did not answer, so I went to him and saw a strange sight. John's and my own reflection in the glass and at John's right hand the shadowy form of a woman with an infant in her arms. I was startled and looked about me but all I saw out of the usual was the shadow of a woman upon the opposite wall. I clutched John's arm. 'What does it mean?' I said. The room seemed real dark, but the sun still shone brightly through the windows.

"'I am blessed if I know,' said John. 'I guess the air is bad.' He went across the room to the west windows, and the shadow woman glided along with him. He threw up the windows and the room filled with the pure out-door air, but the shadows still remained. I felt as if in an ice-house, and shivered. 'I want to go down stairs; I cannot stand this any longer,' I said.

'John never said a word, but he took my hand and we came down stairs together, and I have not been in the room since, but Marah has, several times."

"And seen a shadow everytime, probably," said Aunt Jane sarcastically. "Well, I will tell you this: To-morrow I shall clean and air that room thoroughly, shadows or no shadows! The idea of being routed by a shadow!" and she leaned back in her chair and laughed heartily.

"He laughs best who laughs last," said I, and I went down to the barn where I found John feeding the calves and I sat down on a box and watched him. We have some beautiful calves and they have just the cutest little faces. I can't see how anybody can kill such dear little things—it gives me the creeps just to think of it. According to the Bible God made a wardrobe for Mr. and Mrs. Adam out of the skins of animals, so I suppose he first killed the animals. What a God! Just think of it! I will never, to please anybody, either worship or pretend to worship a God that is not higher than my highest ideal of manhood. John always makes me think of a king of the ideal sort. It makes no difference what he is doing nor how poorly he is dressed, he looks noble and the work he is doing assumes an exaltedness when he is doing it. He always seems to want to do everything he has to do. I have not got to that point yet, but I am going to. After the calves were fed I invited John to sit beside me on the grain bin and then I asked him if he knew anything about Spiritualism?

"Not as much as I intend to," was the answer.

"John," I said, "do tell me all you know about it."

"I know we are confronted by a mystery here in this house, and I think that only through Spiritualism will we ever find a solution. I know that Spiritualism, as one of its advocates, Mrs. Drury of Steelville, proclaims it, is just what I want, what my soul has long been hungering for, the grandest, most beautiful, helpful, ennobling religion the world has ever known. Last week when I went to Steelville on business, I went to hear Mrs. Drury speak and I wish you could have been there with me. I was never so surprised in my life. I expected she was going to offer us something that would suggest the coarse, cheap, tarnished finery of a dirty minstrel show, but it seemed to me when she had finished her remarks that she had gathered the best of everything ever offered to the world under the name of religion, and given it to us under the name of Spiritualism. She is refined and ladylike in her speech and manner and dress, dead in earnest, sympathetic, and kind and respectful when dealing with the opinions of others, and I am determined I will attend her meetings in the future.

"While she was giving the messages she told me a tall man with dark hair and eyes stood beside me and she could see the letters R. W. over my head and she felt impelled to say to me, 'the mystery will be explained to you and a new life opens before you.' The family where I stayed seemed inclined to laugh over the message, but I told them I knew what it meant if no one else did, and the letters R. W. stood for Ripley Wilder, my father's name. They said probably she had been around reading the grave-stones, but they could not explain how she could make any connection between a grave-stone in the far west and me whom she had never seen before. It is strange how some people will believe the most senseless things rather than accept a new truth, or rather a truth that is new to them. It takes more credulity to believe their explanations than to believe what they are trying to explain away."

John says the next time Mrs. Drury comes to Steelville I may go to the meeting with him, and it does not seem to me I can wait for the time to come, but as John says we always do things when we have to. Oh, I am so glad John is my half-brother; seeing he couldn't be a whole one, for he is the best brother a girl ever had!

The next day Aunt Jane went up to Shadow Room and began operations. She declined our help, so we kept away from her and let her have things her own way. About four o'clock she came down looking pale and tired and asked us to go up and look at the room. John had just come in, and so he went up with us. The room looked real clean and nice and all the furniture was arranged differently. The first thing I noticed when I stepped into the room was the shadow of a woman upon the south wall where the mirror had been. Mother noticed it, too, and grabbed my arm tight.

Aunt Jane talked rapidly and acted decidedly nervous. John went over to the mirror and stood for a moment and then said, "Please come here, ladies."

When we stood before the mirror we saw our own reflections and the shadowy figure of a woman with an infant in her arms. Mother almost shrieked, "What does it mean, John?"

"Don't be a fool, Helen Weston," snapped Aunt Jane. Then turning to John she said, "If that hemlock tree out there was out of the way, this shadow business would be stopped, for I have noticed when the wind blows the tree, shadows glide along the wall."

John smiled in a peculiar way and we all left the room. A little later the hemlock was lying on the ground. "I hated to cut down the tree," said he, when I went out to see what he was doing, "but those who pray at the shrine of Truth must be willing to sacrifice something upon her altar."

The next morning Aunt Jane came down to breakfast with a burning spot upon either cheek and she looked ill, but she held her head very high and talked and laughed in a way I never knew her to before. Perhaps she deceived herself into thinking she had deceived us, but she did not. After breakfast I noticed a mysterious noise in the shed chamber and went to investigate. I found Aunt Jane thumping the wall between the unfinished shed chamber and the Shadow Room. She started when she saw me looking at her, and said sullenly, "I thought there must be some room connecting with my room, but I find there is not, so I am hunting for a sliding board or something of the sort. I am going to solve the mystery of those shadows if it takes me six months. I don't believe in spirits," and she shut her jaws with grim determination.

"I thought you said the hemlock tree explained the shadows," I said, a little wickedly I am afraid, but she took no notice of me. She had been in her room but a few minutes that night before I heard her calling to me to bring up a light. I found her in the dark. She said her light went out and so had all the matches she had lighted. I set my lamp upon the table but before I got three feet away from it there came a breath of icy air and the light flared up and went out. I hardly noticed it though, for I saw a strange sight which held me fascinated; for some reason I have never felt afraid in this room. What I saw was four human figures, mist-like in appearance and slightly luminous. They moved about the room and one of them held in her arms an infant. As I watched her she glided before the mirror and reflected there. I saw she was a beautiful young girl with fair complexion and dark luminous eyes.

John came quickly but the minute he entered the room the light went out. He struck a whole card of matches one by one and then went down and got his safety lantern and that burned all right. While John was gone Aunt Jane and I looked upon a strange scene. The fair girl sat down in the print-covered rocker and rocked her baby sobbing piteously as she did so. The room appeared dimly lighted by a tallow candle which sat upon a small table which was not in the room—I mean really—and there was an odd-looking little stove in one corner with a fire in it. A tall man with thin white hands bent over the stove, and a large woman with a heavy mass of gray hair, fumbled in the lower drawer of the bureau. Puff after puff of icy air blew over me, but it was a very hot night.

When John came he asked us what we were staring at, and then it came out that Aunt Jane had seen nothing but semi-luminous figures moving about, "which proves," she said, obstinately, "that neither of us saw anything but what our imagination conjured up."

What has happened in the room since then I do not know. She goes to her room every night with a stern white face, and we all admire her courage. To-morrow night we go to hear Mrs. Drury, and I do hope she will tell me some of the things I want to know.

Write just as soon as you can and tell me all about your dear self.

Lovingly yours,

MARAH WESTON.

CARLYLE PETERSILEA.

That Which Man Has Done, Man May, and Can Do.

I wish to relate an anecdote connected with my dearly beloved husband, Carlyle Petersilea. Mr. Petersilea, from early youth, had been in the habit of smoking. He contracted the vile habit, as other boys do, at the age of ten or twelve years.

After being graduated from the Leipzig Conservatory of Music, he purchased a very expensive smoking set of meerschaum; all of the separate pieces bearing the exquisitely carved profile of King Wilhelm.

Petersilea was naturally very proud and pleased with this beautiful smoking set, which he preserved very carefully for many years, up to the time when he became fifty years of age.

During his career as a great piano virtuoso, he was invited to dine with Longfellow, the poet. After dinner, Longfellow proffered him a cigar, saying, "These cigars were one dollar each;" and if my memory serves me, Longfellow himself did not smoke, but kept these cigars, which had been presented to him, for his invited, gifted and honored guests. Then, during the evening, Mr. Petersilea played to Longfellow the pieces of music which Longfellow loved best, Mozart's principally, ending with Beethoven's grandest sonata.

O, how many times he has told me of that visit, and the smoking of that cigar which cost one dollar; but such folly was in his younger life; and now comes the part of my story which interests me most.

Shortly after Mr. Petersilea reached his fiftieth year, he said to me:

"Amelia, what do you think of my leaving off smoking?"

I answered, "Carlyle, dear, I do not know what advice to give you. I greatly fear that, at your age, after smoking for forty years, it might go very hard with you, perhaps make you very ill and weak; consequently, I dare not advise you."

"Well," he replied, "I shall be obliged to leave off smoking when I go to spirit life, unless, indeed, I return as a spirit, and attach myself to some inveterate smoker; thus making him and myself worse than before. The very thought is becoming horrible to me. No; I must gather up my will-power and leave it off now. There is no better time than now; then I shall not carry the vile habit with me when I enter the higher and should-be better life. Besides, I am a spirit now, and as an immortal soul, I will not continue the nasty habit. My darling, the house is scented with it. All your clothes are scented with it, and I well know you abhor tobacco smoke," which was true.

"Well, dear," I said, "I dare not advise you to leave off the habit, but if you do, I will go against your ever taking it up again, with all my might."

"Agreed!" he answered, "and from this moment I shall never smoke the vile weed again."

That evening he presented his beautiful smoking set to a young Prussian, who desired it as a memento, and keepsake, on account of King Wilhelm's portraits; and from that hour until the day of Mr. Petersilea's departure for the higher life he never smoked again.

He had, occasionally, when very weary, after exhaustive playing, taken a glass of good old German lager beer; from that moment he never took another. He also nearly discontinued the use of meat; and would have done so entirely, but living out of town, as we did, he often had to dine at a restaurant, and here he could get little else; and they really were not willing to serve him unless he took the regular dinner course; but I think he ate very little of it.

Now I write this to encourage both young men and old to leave off the vile habit of smoking. No matter how many years you may have had the habit, leave it off—leave it off. It is never too late to mend. I hear young men often say: "Oh, I can't leave off smoking. The habit is too deeply seated."

"You can. You must. Gather up your will forces and stop on the instant, as I did. You will never regret it, but it will be a source of joy and content to you as long as you live on earth, and forever after you have entered the spiritual spheres."

Carlyle and Amelia Petersilea.

MINISTERING SPIRITS.

would be truly glorious if they could only find an easy cut to all enlightenment. "Ask the guardian spirit and he will tell you everything." Those dear people get mistaken and misled. They desire dogmatic and peremptory teachers; they attract those who assume mastership but not genuine masters. Dogmatists say, "Do as I tell you, ask no questions," and sometimes sensitives are threatened with dire consequences if they disobey. Then comes the problem of obsession. Some poor victim of the results of his own stupidity complains of the mismanagement of the universe. Remember, you can be free from all unpleasant influences if you wish to free yourselves; you can relate yourselves with the highest intelligences if you desire, but there are certain people who never do more than demand what they want on the lower plane, and then find great fault because the higher is not made manifest to them.

Take a few typical biblical instances. Samuel was approached by some young men who came to him to inquire concerning the whereabouts of strayed asses. Samuel did not rebuke the young men who came to him to inquire whither their father's donkeys might have strayed, for the question was thoroughly legitimate, therefore Samuel the prophet said, "Make your minds easy concerning the asses for they have returned home." He exercised his clairvoyance and told the fact very quickly and very reasonably, and put their minds at ease concerning the beasts of burden. Then he said to the young man Saul, "You are to be king over Israel. You thought you came to me to inquire about donkeys, and so you did, but there is a very much higher question to be answered, and a very much nobler work to be done with you than to merely tell you those animals are safe and sound. You are to be the king of Israel; your destiny is to be king; you were born to be king, and king you will be."

Fortune-Telling, Witchcraft, Etc.

Sometimes a fortune-teller so-called, a clairvoyant misnamed a witch, says "I see a crown before you." One might have said it many a year ago to Edward, Prince of Wales. She might have said, "When you are sixty years of age you will be on the throne of England; you will be richly blessed if you are a wise king." But whether a man rules well and wisely or not depends upon himself. Samuel was inspired of heaven to tell Saul he would be king; Saul's destiny was outlined before him, but whether Saul was happy or unhappy, whether he attracted to him holy or unholy influences did not depend on his being king or peasant but upon his own conduct. The youthful David who was to be his successor, while yet a shepherd boy played exquisitely upon his harp and charmed away the king's insanity brought about by his own ungodly conduct. David dared to stand before the monarch and with heaven's inspiration told that monarch that, king or no king, his health and sanity depended entirely upon his own behavior. And this is true wherever one may stand high or low in the world's esteem, wearing a crown or cleaning shoes or selling newspapers on the street corners, it matters not, every one's happiness, every one's blessedness depends upon himself and no one need be unhappy, no one need be unsuccessful, and no one need be ill. That is a very bold but a thoroughly true statement. No matter what a destiny may be, Saul never drew an evil spirit to him because he was king, and never drew a good spirit to him because he was a king. When Saul was ruling righteously he drew angels of heaven to him, when ruling unrighteously he drew dark influences to his side.

No matter whether you are Theodore Roosevelt or the colored man who opens the gate that leads to the White House grounds, no matter whether you are ruling or serving in the world's esteem, health and happiness, safety and blessedness depend upon the individual, and no truer doctrine was ever proclaimed than this. No other doctrine has ever been spoken from heaven, and when people learn to discriminate between genuine spiritual revelation and foolish witchcraft, mere empty-headed fortune-telling, there may be some improvement in the laws of various countries.

It was only very recently that a lady in Montreal was obliged to give her word of honor to a magistrate that she will give no sittings, because the Canadian government is opposed to witchcraft. There is something for organized Spiritualists to look into—not necessarily in Washington, because the laws of the United States have nothing to do with Canada, which is under another flag; but wherever people are persecuted, wherever any are interfered with in the legitimate carrying out of their business they should be protected by the strong arm of the law, but where people do not bestir themselves but are merely apathetic and indifferent, then it is their own negligence more than the persecuting spirit of their neighbors which gets them as a community into any sort of trouble.

The Work of the Guides.

But why don't the guides do it all? Why don't the guides protect their mediums? Why don't our dear spirit friends look after all our interests? Why do they allow us to get into trouble? You might just as well say, why does a father or mother allow a child to fall down and hurt itself when the parents have the muscular ability to prevent the child from falling. Do we deny for a moment that a child can be protected by paternal arms? Do we deny that the mother is strong enough of muscle to lift the child and carry him so that he cannot fall? And yet if parents always did so, there would be no development of individual strength, no formation of character, no unfolding of incipient manhood or womanhood.

What would be the condition of a man or woman always carried, or always wheeled about in an enlarged perambulator or baby carriage, only altered in size but not in nature to accommodate the increased number of pounds in weight, and feet and inches in height, of the person who was still occupying it? Can there ever be spiritual, moral, mental, or physical development so long as there is simply guidance, simply ministration that does not work out the evolution of individual consciousness? Now, the mother and father are the guardians of the baby's welfare and are in their places truly teachers and superintendents while any child has need of their fostering care, yet every child must work out salvation, every one must be thrown upon his own resources.

Can you point on the pages of history to a single great man or woman who has ever achieved real greatness by having it forced upon him? You may turn to the career of Abraham Lincoln, and ask, Why did the guardian angels allow that boy to be so poor in his early youth; why did they allow him to gain so little education and that obtained with so much difficulty and hardship? Why didn't they provide everything for him if he was going to be President of these United States, savior of the nation, and freer of the slaves? Why didn't they give him at the time of his birth not only a silver spoon but put even a golden spoon in his mouth? Why did they not rear him in the lap of luxury and look well after their own? Because the higher intelligences knew full well that the hardihood, the nobility of character, the genuine strength within, and everything else that made the real Abraham Lincoln was only to be procured by having him inured to hardship. Had the dear little boy had his food handed to him on a golden platter and always been put to bed under eiderdown covers, and sent to an aristocratic school, he would never have been on earth what he became, for the very discipline that made him grow noble and hardy would have been wanting.

Can we expect a great character to be evolved by taking a child and keeping it a child forever? When people ask why they don't get more enlightenment than they do, we reply, You get all you deserve, and when you deserve more you will get more. If you want a higher revelation, do you deserve it, do you work for it?

Flammarion has obtained great astronomical knowledge; but he has worked for it most diligently.

Madame and Monsieur Curie, the discoverers of radium, have achieved great results after working for them indefatigably.

Marconi has practically perfected his system of wireless telegraphy after working to that end tirelessly.

Edison has done a glorious work, but wherever there has been a great work accomplished there has been great working.

Heaven has inspired Edison, Flammarion, Marconi and the Curies, and heaven is ever inspiring inventors and discoverers. Great musicians, authors, poets, painters, sculptors, reformers, liberators—they are all inspired.

The Angels of Peace.

You are taken into a fraternity if you are faithful, you become a brother Mason, a working member in a society, you are an active member of a congregation, you are one of the federation, and those bright and holy intelligences who guide and direct you regard you as a fellow member. Suppose we have a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer and board of trustees or directors; they are only fellow members holding office for the time being and exercising supervision over congregational affairs. The President of the United States is in the position which he now holds and is sustained therein that he may be the leader of the people.

When working for peace last summer, the President's voice was the voice of all wise Americans, the voice of Columbia and of the guiding spirit that has charge of this Republic. Theodore Roosevelt responded to the heavenly voice, answered to the call, and we verily aver that when he called together the plenipotentiaries at Washington and then at Portsmouth; that when he invited the Russians and the Japanese to confer with him; when he invited first one and then another representative of the estranged nations to Oyster Bay to meet him and be friendly with him in his summer home, he was answering to the call of heaven. The guardian angel of Russia said, "I want peace." The guardian angel of Japan said, "I want peace." And the guardian angels of Russia and Japan held a spiritual conversation with the guardian angel of America and decided between them to inspire the President of the United States to make a move to bring about on earth the work that had been planned in heaven. The guardian angels of the nations saw that the war did not terminate fatally on either side. They saw that the best and highest good would result from allowing them to go so far and no farther, then they cried "Hold!" and put a stop to it.

The people read in their newspapers one day that the peace negotiations were practically at an end and that the war would doubtless continue, that Russia was determined to prolong the war and would not pay any indemnity while Japan insisted upon it; the next day came that wonderful demonstration of the power of the peace angel which astonished the trembling world. When it was darkest, when the clouds above seemed black as a raven's plume, when the world was trembling upon the verge of an awful precipice—the war ended suddenly and thanksgiving services were held for the renewal of peace.

Do you think that was all brought about on one side the mystic ve[il]? Do you think that all took place on earth? Do you think that only plenipotentiaries and the President, the Mikado and the Czar, those directly in their confidence, had to do with this? There [was] great upheaval in the spiritual world and it was responded to on [earth]. But it would not have been consummated had the people not been ready. We may pipe unto you when you do not answer, we may call unto you when you do not respond, as the prophets of old were wont to say.

It may be the voice of the guardian angel that whispers in your ear as an elder brother or sister, as a faithful monitor; and it is for you and for all of us to co-operate, if we will. We are never coerced but always guided by celestial legions.

So helpful is this book that as many as 21 copies have been sold to a group formed to hear it read. Manifestations of healing are common where students unite to study and practice the instructions given in this wonderful book. Many are willing to pay for instruction in healing truth, but there is need of energetic persons to get them together.
Those who can successfully form groups in their own town among their friends will find enjoyable and profitable work doing the same in other towns.

THE SUPERNATURAL AND THE SPIRITUAL.

To the Editor of the Sun:—I have received a sympathetic letter from one who has come, apparently through mental tribulation, to the conclusion that he must give up "supernaturalism." But so have we all, if by the supernatural is meant anything above or contrary to nature; that is, to the order of the universe. If there is a supreme power at work, it works in every thing and its workings in all things are alike natural. As was said long ago by a Roman poet:

As far as eye can range or feet can rove,
Jove is in all things, all things are in Jove.

In giving up the supernatural, therefore, my correspondent is not giving up the spiritual or anything implied in its existence. What he probably means to give up, and if he is true to reason must give up, is miracle. Simultaneously with his letter I get the declaration of a simple soul who has been converted, or reconverted, to the faith by witnessing the miraculous liquefaction of the blood of St. Januarius. He says that he actually saw with his own eyes the solid suddenly become liquid. Unquestionably the simple soul did. There is another periodical miracle of the same kind at Amalfi, where the bones of a saint exude on a certain day in each year. Does American Catholicism believe in these miracles?

To a Galilean peasant living before the dawn of science miracle was natural, and belief in its occurrence, even in such a case as the demoniac miracle at Gadara, would not interfere with his moral perceptions or destroy his trustworthiness as a moral and general reporter.

I am not sure whether I ever referred in your columns to a case which fell under my own notice. Many years ago a convent in the Tyrol was the alleged scene of miracle wrought upon the persons of two nuns. The Addolorata bore the stigmata; the Estatica was miraculously raised from the ground in prayer. There was a great controversy about the case, in which, if I remember rightly, Lord Shrewsbury, the leading Catholic layman, took part. I happened to allude to the case in print as probably one of hysteria. Thereupon I received a visit from a fellow of a college at Oxford, who afterward became a Roman Catholic, but who was a man, I should have said, not only of superior cultivation, but of remarkable good sense in ordinary matters, and certainly of the highest character. He assured me that he and two companions, also fellows of colleges and in every respect, except that of their extreme High Church bias, eminently trustworthy, had actually witnessed the miracles and had seen the blood run upward on the Addolorata's forehead. Those miracles were in the end completely exposed and withdrawn.
GOLDWIN SMITH.

"BRICK POMEROY'S PHILOSOPHY.

Let every one enjoy his own belief till you can educate him into a better one.

That day is best spent in which the most is accomplished for the good of others.

A man has a right to judge himself by what he does regardless of the opinion of others.

Every person desirous of quarreling can easily catch on and be made still more uncomfortable.

The man who cannot quickly and quietly control himself is not fully competent to control others.

The one who gives us new thoughts is better to us than the one who gives only material presents.

The more we do to add to the happiness of others the more sunshine and contentment comes to us.

The less of reasoning power and the fewer ideas a man has the more arbitrary and egotistical he is.

Almost any man can dread to attempt, and there are those who can perform while the other is dreading.

When a sick man is able to grumble, growl and wrangle he is able to get up and do his own chores at least.

Thought is the pioneer and action its servant who gets there or is left, as he is active or lazy and indifferent.

Never mind the righteous, as they are all right. The sinners and sufferers are the ones who should have our love and our efforts to upbuild into better conditions.
